taking of a deposition in the same is not authorized. Section 60 of the administration act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1908, chap. 3) provides that contested claims against the estate of a decedent shall be "tried and determined as other suits at law." This provision, when construed together with the provisions of the act on evidence and depositions, permits of the taking of depositions in claims filed against estates of decedents in the probate court. The appellee is in no position to complain of the action of the court in this regard in any event, as it offered the deposition of a witness on its part and was allowed to read the same in evidence.

Appellee complains of the action of the court in refusing to give certain instructions asked in its behalf, and in giving other instructions asked on the part of appellant. The questions raised on a number of these instructions have been already passed upon in the discussion of other questions involved, and it will not be necessary to deal with them further. Matters raised by some of them, however, have not been noted. About four months before her death, Mrs. McVicker, accompanied by the appellant, went to the state of California, where she died. Under a special arrangement made with Mrs. McVicker, appellant accompanied her to California and attended her there. It is conceded that appellant was not licensed to practise medicine in the state of California, and appellee insists that for that reason he is not entitled to recover anything for his services performed in the state of California, whether rendered pursuant to a contract or otherwise, and that the jury should have been so instructed. Appellant, when in attendance upon Mrs. McVicker, under the terms of his contract, while she was sojourning temporarily in the state of California, was licensed to practise medicine in the state of Illinois, and, so far as the determination of the questions involved here is concerned, it is immaterial whether he had authority to practise medicine in the state of California, or whether the medical attention he gave to Mrs. McVicker while in the state of California was in violation of the laws of that state. He was not engaged in the general practice of medicine in California, but was simply in attendance upon his patient, who was a resident of Illinois, while she was temporarily in California. The instructions asked on the part of appellee on this question were properly refused.

It is also contended by appellee that appellant violated the terms of his contract in refusing to accompany Mrs. McVicker to California in 1903, and for that reason is not entitled to recover on the contract. A fair and reasonable interpretation of the contract would not require appellant to accompany Mrs. McVicker to any place she might see fit to go temporarily, for the purpose of treating her professionally, but only bound him to treat her at her permanent place of abode. That the parties so understood the terms of the contract is evidenced by the fact that, when appellant did accompany her to California in 1904, it was under a special arrangement whereby he was to receive extra compensation for doing so.

Under the view we take of the case it is not necessary to pass upon the question of the right of appellant to recover upon a quantum meruit.

Objections are urged by appellee to the action of the court in excluding and admitting evidence, but upon examination of the record we do not find any reversible error in that regard. From a consideration of the whole record we are of the opinion that the contract entered into by Mrs. McVicker and appellant is a valid and binding one. Appellant, having fully performed it on his part, is entitled to an affirmance of the judgment of the circuit court.

For the reasons assigned, the judgment of the Appellate Court is reversed, and the judgment of the Circuit Court affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied June 8, 1910.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES CAHILL, Appt.,

v.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

(— Iowa, —, 125 N. W. 331.)

Master — railroad — fellow servant — statutory abolition — repair gang.

1. The act of a repair gang on a railroad in removing a hand car from the track to permit a train to pass is connected with the operation of the road, within the meaning of a statute abolishing the fellow-servant rule in case of accidents connected with such operation.

Same — negligence — dropping hand car.

2. The jury may find negligence where one of the men lifting a hand car from the track prematurely drops it without warning, to Note. — Upon the question, What is a railroad hazard within the statute abolishing or restricting the fellow-servant rule as to railroad employees, see notes to Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co. 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 477, and Hanson v. Northern P. R. Co. 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 969.

- 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the injury of a coservant, in violation of the custom not to drop the car until ordered to do so after all are ready to act together.

Evidence — presumption of negligence — exclamation.

3. The mere exclamation of a track hand immediately after he had dropped his corner of a hand car which a repair gang was removing from the track, that he did not mean to do so, is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of negligence arising from his act.

(March 15, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Buchanan County entered upon a directed verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cook & Cook, for appellant:

The foreman of a section gang is a fellow servant of his helpers, within the meaning of § 2071 of the Code.

Houser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 60 Iowa, 230, 46 Am. Rep. 65, 14 N. W. 778; Foley v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 644, 21 N. W. 124; Larson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 91 Iowa, 81, 58 N. W. 1076.

A servant propelling a hand car upon a railroad track is engaged in the use and operation of a railroad.

Larson v. Illinois C. R. Co. supra; Mike-sell v. Wabash R. Co. 134 Iowa, 736, 112 N. W. 201; Frandsen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 372; Smith v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. (Iowa) 80 N. W. 658; Lombard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 494; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 507, 34 L. ed. 747, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; Steffenson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 355, 11 L.R.A. 271, 47 N. W. 1068; Lakey v. Texas & P. R. Co. 33 Tex. Civ. App. 44, 75 S. W. 566; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. McCraw, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 247, 95 S. W. 82; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hervey (Tex. Civ. App.) 89 S. W. 1095; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Jennings, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 375, 81 S. W. 822; Seery v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 34 Tex. Civ. App. 89, 77 S. W. 950; Thompson v. Chappell, 91 Mo. App. 297; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Perry, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 81, 85 S. W. 62; Hardt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 130 Wis. 512, 110 N. W. 427.

Messrs. Kenyon, Kelleher & O'Connor and T. J. Fitzpatrick for appellee.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff was a section foreman in the service of defendant at Winthrop, Iowa. In the work of repairing and mending the railway track, he and his gang of three men were supplied with a push car on which tools or materials were transported or moved from place to place. It was their duty to be on the lookout for trains, and in proper time before the arrival of one to remove the push car from the track. On the day in question, plaintiff and his men were, in the line of duty, moving their car with their tools and repair material along the track to the eastward, when they discovered the approach of a train and set about the work of clearing the track. The car was furnished with a convenient handle at each of its four corners, and the gang, following the usual method, each laid hold of a handle, and, lifting the vehicle, carried it to the north side of the track. The snow at that point was about eighteen inches deep. It was the custom in thus removing the car to let it down at the word or call of the foreman or some other member of the gang, when it had been carried to a safe distance from the track. On this occasion, when the car had cleared the north rail but a short distance, and while the plaintiff was carrying the northwest corner, someone of the other three men either purposely or accidentally let go his hold, causing plaintiff to fall in such manner that he was struck by the handle or frame of the car, receiving injuries which disabled him for a year or more. Immediately as he fell, and while still under the car, which had fallen on him, one of the men came to his assistance, saying: "I dropped the car and didn't mean to. Are you hurt?" This is the case as made by the plaintiff, and, as he was denied the right to go to the jury, we are required to give the testimony the construction most favorable to him.

The single question presented is whether, upon such construction of the record, we can say that a verdict for the plaintiff could be upheld. This depends in a degree upon the nature of the service in which he was employed and of the negligence of which he complains. If the negligence (if any there was) can fairly be said to have been "connected with the use and operation of the railroad on or about which he was employed," then he comes within the protection of Code, § 2071, and the fellow-servant rule will not prevent his recovery of damages. The "operation of a railway" includes something more than the transportation of freights and passengers, and the army of employees connected with its "use and operation" includes within its ranks more than those who are engaged in the moving of trains. A very appreciable proportion of the operation of a railway has to do with its maintenance and repair, and especially where such work involves the movement of engines or of cars of various kinds and uses. For instance, the statute has been held to include within its protection the shoveler unloading gravel from a gravel car (McKnight v. Iowa & M. R. Constr. Co. 43 Iowa, 406); the shoveler in the gravel bank loading a car (Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 52); one engaged in operating a derrick erected on a flat car (Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 576, 35 N. W. 611); clinker man (Butler v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 87 Iowa, 206, 54 N. W. 208); coal handlers while coaling a standing engine (Akeson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 106 Iowa, 54, 75 N. W. 676); track men distributing rails with the aid of an engine and cable (Williams v. Iowa C. R. Co. 121 Iowa, 270, 96 N. W. 774); section men in the use of a hand car (Mikesell v. Wabash R. Co. 134 Iowa, 736, 112 N. W. 201; Larson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 91 Iowa, 81, 58 N. W. 1076); construction car moving over a temporary track (Mace v. H. A. Boedker & Co. 127 Iowa, 721, 104 N. W. 475). In the Larson Case this court cited with approval Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 507, 34 L. ed. 747, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129, in which it was held that the use of a hand car by section men was an employment connected with the operation of a railway, within the meaning of our statute. See also Smith v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. (Iowa) 80 N. W. 658, and Frandsen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 372.

It is generally held by all courts where statutes similar to our Code, § 2071, have been enacted, that the provision is intended for the benefit of those railway employees, no matter in what department of service, whose duty for the time being exposes them to dangers and hazards peculiar to the operation of railways. And surely when a man, in pursuance of his employment, rides or pushes or manages a hand car along the rails to transport tools or material or men, his service is as certainly "connected with the operation of a railway" as is the man who handles the throttle upon an engine which pulls or pushes a car loaded with gravel or other road-building material. So, also, the danger to which the section hand is exposed in moving his car along the track from the approach of trains having the right of way is danger peculiar to railroading, and as his duty requires him, under such circumstances, to remove his car from the rails until the train has passed, and then to replace it and proceed, such service never ceases to be connected with the operation of the railroad, and, so far as any danger attends such service, it must be classed with the hazards of railroad operation. If the railway company should provide side tracks and switches for the benefit of section men and their hand cars, their work in taking to such side tracks for the passing of trains would be so obviously connected with the operation of the railway that few would think of questioning it; and when the company obviates the necessity of side tracks and switches for such use by furnishing a car which the men can carry, and requires them to do their "switching" by lifting it bodily from the rails and replacing it when the danger has passed, we are very clear that in so doing they are still assisting in the operation of the road. This conclusion finds support in cases from other states as well as our own. Hardt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 130 Wis. 512, 110 N. W. 427; Steffenson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 355, 11 L.R.A. 271, 47 N. W. 1068.

There is nothing in Dunn v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 130 Iowa, 580, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 452, 107 N. W. 616, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 226, inconsistent with the view here expressed. In that case no question of the use of a hand car arose. The only inquiry there was whether the injury caused by a passing engine striking an iron bar negligently left on the track, and hurling it against a section hand standing on the right of way, was of the class covered by Code, § 2071, and a majority of this court held that it was not. Until the majority recedes from that holding, it remains the law of this state for cases of that kind; but neither in fact or principle is the case at bar within the rule of that precedent. In this connection we may as well refer also to the case of Andrews v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 129 Iowa, 162, 105 N. W. 404, which is cited by appellee as having an important bearing on the questions presented by the present appeal. In that case plaintiff was injured by the falling or dropping of a hand car which he and others were carrying. No negligence was charged against the fellow workman who dropped the car, nor was the question raised whether in carrying the car they were engaged in the operation of a railroad, within the meaning of our statute. The negligence alleged was the act or omission of the foreman in permitting the coming train to get too near before clearing the track, whereby the work had to be done in such a hurry that it caused one of the men to stumble and lose his hold on the car. We held that there was no sufficient showing that the delay by the foreman was the proximate cause of the injury. The decision has little, if any, bearing upon the issue now under consideration.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

We turn now to the question whether there was any evidence upon which the jury could find that there was negligence on the part of plaintiff's fellow workman in dropping the car without warning. Counsel for appellee say that no presumption of negligence arises from the mere happening of an accident. A better statement of the rule is that no presumption of negligence arises from the mere fact of injury to the plaintiff. Such presumption may and often does arise from the nature of the cause or manner of the injury. For instance, the mere fact that a train man is injured while engaged in the line of his duty will not justify an inference of negligence on the part of his employer; but if it appear that the injury was received in a collision between two trains of the same company moving in opposite directions on the same track, an inference of negligence does arise. The fact that a workman in a mine or quarry suffers injury from the explosion of a blast will not alone entitle him to recover damages from his master; but if it further appear that he was entitled to a warning and opportunity to escape before the blast was fired, and that no warning was given, a very different rule prevails. There may have been no negligence in either case. In the one, control of an engine may have been lost from causes against which reasonable care could not have provided, and, in the other, the blast may have been prematurely ignited without fault of anyone; but the injured party suing for damages has never been held to negative all such possible explanations. As is said in Columbus & X. R. Co. v. Webb, 12 Ohio St. 475: "In proving the injury, the plaintiff . . . may and often does prove such circumstances under which the injury was received, as raise a presumption of carelessness or negligence, and in such a case the burden of disproving the presumption, by explaining the circumstances so as to render their existence consistent with the absence of any negligence, would devolve upon the defendant." This rule has been applied to cases where a railway switch has been found open (International & G. N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 160, 55 S. W. 772); where a car escapes and runs wild (Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Hayes, 97 Ala. 201, 12 So. 98); where a stone is being lifted over a workman and it falls upon him (Smith v. Baker, 65 L. T. N. S. 467); where a girder falls from a building in the course of construction (Wright Fire Proofing Co. v. Poczekai, 130 Ill. 139, 22 N. E. 543); where a bucket used in hoisting coal is prematurely tripped (Cummings v. National Furnace Co. 60 Wis. 603, 18 N. W. 742, 20 N. W. 665); where a steel rail was thrown from a pile without warning to those below (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Koehler, 37 Kan. 463, 15 Pac. 567); where a piece of timber was being handled by fellow servants, one of whom turned the stick prematurely, to the injury of another (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brassfield, 51 Kan. 167, 32 Pac. 814); where section hands were carrying a heavy steel rail, and one of them suddenly let go his hold, causing injury to his fellow workman (Blomquist v. Great Northern R. Co. 65 Minn. 69, 67 N. W. 804). Many others of similar nature might be cited.

In the case at bar the evidence tended to show that, in lifting the car from the track, it was the custom of the gang to give a word of warning when ready to set it down. The plaintiff was foreman, and the one from whom the word would naturally be expected, though under the evidence it might perhaps be given by anyone of the gang. The foreman was at the northwest corner, substantially in the direction the car was being carried. He was faced away from the car with the handle lifted about his hip and somewhat behind him. The man Penny was at the southwest corner, and it was he, as plaintiff testifies, who let go his hold, or dropped the car, no word of warning having been given by anyone. These facts are, in our opinion, sufficient to make the question of due care on the part of Penny one for the consideration of the jury. The fact that he dropped his corner of the car and did it without warning is shown. There is nothing, except his exclamation or statement to which we shall soon refer, to show that his act was not voluntary or due to his carelessness. Such being the case, and no explanation or denial appearing, the jury could rightfully find, if indeed it was not bound to presume, that the act was a voluntary one or one of pure heedlessness.

Does the statement made by Penny: "I dropped the car. I didn't mean to. Have I hurt you?"—introduce any element into the case which obviates the result above indicated? We think not. Independent of this statement, there is evidence that he is the one who dropped the car, and the effect of that proof is not neutralized by his declaration that he did not mean to do it. But even conceding the literal truth, it is not inconsistent with his alleged negligence. Counsel is not correct in the assumption that, if an act is inadvertent, it is therefore not negligent, for, generally speaking, the very essence of negligence is inadvertence. Only the malignant or vicious intend injury to others, and such intentional injury is wilful, but not negligent in the proper sense of the word. Were there any evidence here that Penny lost his hold by reason of slipping or stumbling, or other cause consistent with due care on his part, the cases of Bolsem v. Iowa C. R. Co. 140 Iowa, 73, 117 N. W. 1098, and Tibbitts v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. 138 Iowa, 178, 115 N. W. 1021, and other precedents of that class, cited by appellee, would be pertinent; but the record discloses nothing except that Penny, whose duty it was to hold up his corner until the word was given, dropped it. Presumptively such act was voluntary, and, being a violation of the duty which he owed to others engaged in lifting the car, it was negligent. His statement after the injury that he "did not mean to" may have been, and probably was, competent evidence as a part of the res gestæ; but it would be going entirely too far to say it was conclusive of the question of his due care.

For the reasons stated, it was error to direct a verdict, and the judgment appealed from is therefore reversed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY

v.

CITY OF JANESVILLE, Impleaded, etc.

(137 Wis. 7, 118 N. W. 182.)

Special assessment — railroad property.

1. A freight depot and spur tracks of a railroad company, although part of its entire system, are subject to special assessment for local improvement, under a statute providing that the property of railroad companies shall be in all respects subject to all special assessments for local improvement in the same manner and to the same extent as the property of individuals.

Same — frontage — benefit.

2. The legislature may, under the police power, provide for the assessment of a fixed proportion of the cost of a public sanitary sewer upon abutting property by the front-foot rule, so that each parcel pays for the cost of its local service sewer without regard to the benefits actually accruing to the property.

(November 10, 1908.)

Note. — Assessments for improvements by the front-foot rule.

I. Scope of note, 1125.

II. The power to impose special assessments.

a. In the abstract, 1126.

b. The custodian, 1127.

c. Nature.

1. The taxing power, 1129.

2. The power of eminent domain, 1130.

3. The police power, 1132.

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Superior Court for Douglas County in an action brought to enjoin the collection of a special assessment against property of plaintiff; plaintiff appealing from so much as upheld a portion of assessment and defendant appealing from so much as rejected a portion. Reversed on defendant's appeal.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. H. Van Alstine, with Messrs. Jackson & Jackson, for plaintiff:

The franchises of a railroad with its main track, branch, spur, and side tracks, rights of way, depot grounds, depot buildings, and other property used in operating its railroad, constitute an entirety.

Yellow River Improv. Co. v. Wood County,

81 Wis. 554, 17 L.R.A. 92, 51 N. W. 1004; Fond du Lac Water Co. v. Fond du Lac, 82 Wis. 322, 16 L.R.A. 581, 52 N. W. 439; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 506, 28 L.R.A. 249, 62 N. W. 417; State ex rel. Milwaukee Street R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Wis. 550, 63 N. W. 746; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Forest County, 95 Wis. 80, 70 N. W. 77; Pittsburg Testing Laboratory v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 110 Wis. 633, 84 Am. St. Rep. 948, 86 N. W. 592; Merrill R. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 119 Wis. 249, 96 N. W. 686; Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co. 120 Wis. 575, 98 N. W. 539; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. State, 128 Wis. 553, 108 N. W. 557.

The entirety of the property of the rail-

III. Distinction between taxes and assessments, 1133.

IV. Constitutional limitations of the power of arbitrary assessment.

a. The taxing power.

1. In general, 1135.

2. Requirement that taxation shall be equal, 1136.

3. Requirement that taxation shall be uniform, 1137.

4. Requirement that taxation shall be both equal and uniform, 1138.

5. Requirement that taxation shall be ad valorem, 1138.

6. Requirement that taxation shall be ad valorem and imposed by uniform rule, 1139.

7. Requirement that taxation shall be equal, uniform, and ad valorem, 1140.

8. The Constitutions of Illinois, 1141.

9. The Constitutions of Alabama, 1142.

10. Review of Constitutional requirements of equal, uniform, and ad valorem taxation in relation to assessments, 1142.

b. The power of eminent domain, 1144.

c. The Federal Constitution,

V. Municipal power.

a. Constitutional, 1149.

b. Statutory, 1150.

VI. The principles governing the interposition of the courts, 1151.

VII. The necessity for an apportionment, 1157.

VIII. The legislative discretion to prescribe rules of apportionment, 1158.

IX. The binding quality of statutory rules of apportionment.

a. In general, 1160.

b. The front-foot rule, 1161.

c. The rule of benefits, 1162.

d. The ad valorem rule, 1165.

e. Alternative rules, 1166.

X. Effect of omission of legislature to prescribe a rule of apportionment, 1166.

XI. Special benefits the justification and foundation of local assessments, 1168.

XII. Assessments that exceed benefits, 1172.

XIII. Equation of benefit and burden to particular pieces of property, 1175.

XIV. The front-foot rule in the abstract, 1178.

XV. Squaring the front-foot rule with the rule of benefits, 1182.

XVI. Failures of the front-foot rule to represent benefits.

a. Rural lands, 1191.

b. Property off the line of improvement, 1192.

c. When benefits are utterly ignored, 1193.

XVII. The front-foot rule as affected by the sort of improvement.

a. Improvements under the police power, 1195.

b. Improvements involving the power of eminent domain, 1197.

XVIII. The landowner's right to notice and a hearing, 1201.

XIX. The proper method of assessing according to the front-foot rule, 1204.

XX. Estoppel of landowner, 1206.

XXI. Conclusion, 1206.

I. Scope of note.

The subject of this note being exclusively one of American constitutional law, no foreign cases have been available. The deciway company, including the freight depot and spur tracks, was, in 1905, exempt from taxation and from assessment for local improvements.

Merrill R. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 119 Wis. 253, 96 N. W. 686; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Douglas County, 122 Wis. 273, 99 N. W. 1030; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. New Haven, 42 Conn. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 534; Pittsburg Testing Laboratory v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. supra; Buncombe County v. Tommey, 115 U. S. 122, 29 L. ed. 305, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 626, 1186; Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co. v. Douglas County, 103 Wis. 75, 79 N. W. 34; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 14, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849; Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 243;

Soens v. Racine, 10 Wis. 271; Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 34 Wis. 271; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Crawford County, 48 Wis. 666, 5 N. W. 3; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Bayfield County, 87 Wis. 188, 58 N. W. 245.

The entirety of the property of the railway company cannot be broken up without express legislative authority.

Yellow River Improv. Co. v. Wood County; Fond du Lac Water Co. v. Fond du Lac; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Forest County; and State ex rel. Milwaukee Street R. Co. v. Anderson,—supra; Merrill R. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 119 Wis. 249, 96 N. W. 686.

sions of the Federal and state courts which involved applications of the front-foot rule of apportioning special assessments for local improvements naturally all belong, and have been included, in the note, in so far as they contained aught of value, however slight, to the exposition of the law of the subject; and, in order that nothing necessary to a complete display of the case law shall be lacking, some additional cases in which assessments had been imposed in proportion to the superficial area of the burdened property or ad valorem have been cited and discussed. There are indeed numerous cases in which the front-foot rule was used in apportioning the assessment under review, but in which it was accepted as legal without a question, and in which the assessment was sustained or annulled upon unrelated grounds. These cases throw no light upon the rationale of the rule and hence have been generally omitted. To have included them would simply have added to the confusion in which the conflicting decisions have involved the subject, and unduly extended a work already long. There is scarcely any department of the law, said Shiras, J., in the opinion of the court in one of the leading assessment cases, Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521, in which it is easier to collect one body of decisions and contrast them with another in apparent conflict than that which deals with the taxing and police powers.

From time to time there have been published, in the first and present series of these reports, notes which it will be of advantage to the reader to consult in connection with this subject, as much of the matter in them is in point here, and has not been repeated in the same form. The following notes may be particularly mentioned as worthy of perusal: That to Birmingham v. Klein, 8 L.R.A. 369, on the constitutional restriction of the power of taxation, and valuation, equality, and uniformity; that to Ulman v. Baltimore, 11 L.R.A. 224, on constitutional law and the protection of property rights; that to Re Madera Irrig. Dist. Bonds, 14 L.R.A. 755, on the necessity of special bene- 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) fit to sustain assessments for local improvements; that to Raleigh v. Peace, 17 L.R.A. 330, on the constitutionality of frontage rule of assessment; that to Davis v. Litchfield, 21 L.R.A. 563, on the validity of assessments upon abutting property made by charging each piece the cost of the improvement in front of it; that to Chicago v. Blair, 24 L.R.A. 412, on street sprinkling as a local improvement; that to Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 28 L.R.A. 249, on the liability of railroad right of way to assessment for local improvements; that to Asberry v. Roanoke, 42 L.R.A. 636, on the doctrine of special benefits as a necessary basis for local assessments; that to Shriveport v. Prescott, 46 L.R.A. 193, on the liability of street railway for paving assessment; that to Heffner v. Cass & Morgan Counties, 58 L.R.A. 353, entitled, Who is liable for the expense of drainage; that part of the note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L.R.A. 33, on the establishment and regulation of municipal water supply, embraced in division II., subdivision c, section 2, subsection (b) respecting frontage assessments, pp. 54-56; the note to Doughten v. Camden, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 817, on the imposition of the cost of laying water mains in a city street upon the abutting property; and the note to Arnold v. Knoxville, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 837, on the question whether a special assessment is a tax, within constitutional provisions relating to uniformity of taxation.

II. The power to impose special assessments.

a. In the abstract.

The existence in general of power in an American state to assess private property in order to defray the costs of certain classes of public work, however questioned in the past, is in the present unchallenged.

Examples of local assessments for partial improvements, said the court in Palmyra v. Morton, 25 Mo. 593, are familiar in the legislation of states and municipal corporations. The subject has been thoroughly

The tracks, rights of way, depots, and depot grounds of a railway company, actually used by it in the operation of its road, are not, under ordinary conditions, benefited by local improvements, and are not liable to be assessed for the cost of such improvements.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, supra; Junction R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 424; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 516, 28 L.R.A. 249, 62 N. W. 417; Pittsburg Testing Laboratory v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. supra; Allegheny v. Western Pennsylvania R. Co. 138 Pa. 375, 21 Atl. 763.

If the freight depot and tracks were actually benefited by the construction of the sewers, assessments for such benefits, tending to destroy the entirety of the property of the railway company, would not be enforced.

Wilkinson v. Hoffman, 61 Wis. 637, 21 N. W. 816; Yellow River Improv. Co. v. Wood

County and Fond du Lac Water Co. v. Fond du Lac, supra; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 506, 28 L.R.A. 249, 62 N. W. 417; State ex rel. Milwaukee Street R. Co. v. Anderson; Pittsburg Testing Laboratory v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co.; Merrill R. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill; and Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co.,—supra.

Mr. H. L. Maxfield, for defendant:

The lots owned by a railroad in fee, abutting on the street in which such sewer is laid, are liable to assessments for same.

Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Lindquist, 119 Iowa, 144, 93 N. W. 103; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 300, 51 L.R.A. 763, 83 N. W. 1074; Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 243; Blount v. Janesville, 31 Wis. 648.

When sewerage is laid in streets, all the abutting property and all real estate benefited by the construction of same is liable to assessment, and the benefits are deter-discussed, and every principle bearing on it severely analyzed in almost every state in the Union where the power has been exercised; and it is now as firmly established as any other doctrine of American law.

It is not open to doubt, in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, that it is in the power of a state to require local improvements to be made which are essential to the health and prosperity of any community within its borders. Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663.

Abutting owners may undoubtedly be burdened with special assessments upon their property to meet the expenses of opening public highways in front of such property. Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137.

And special taxes for local improvements, such as the construction of sewers, may properly be imposed by the authority of the state upon property specially benefited by such improvements. Rutherford v. Hamilton, 97 Mo. 543, 11 S. W. 249.

b. The custodian.

This power of the state is necessarily committed to the legislature. It is included in the general grant of legislative power. Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333.

The power of the legislature to impose special taxes for purely local improvements is, like the power to impose taxes generally, plenary. Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 274.

It rests with the legislature, if unconstrained by constitutional provisions, to determine in what manner the means to defray the cost of a public work or local improvement authorized shall be raised. Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The power of apportionment of assessments for local improvements upon the property benefited, like the power of taxation, belongs exclusively to the legislature, when not restricted by constitutional provisions limiting such imposts or prescribing a rule of apportionment. Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76, 73 Am. Dec. 518.

The legislature, in exercising the taxing power in assessing property for local improvements, and apportioning the burden, has a wide latitude of discretion. St. Joseph use of Gibson v. Farrell, 106 Mo. 437, 17 S. W. 497.

The legislature has the widest discretion to direct the manner in which assessments shall be laid and collected upon property benefited specially by a public improvement, to defray its cost. Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8.

The mode of apportionment, and the extent of territory which may be assessed for the cost of a local improvement, are necessarily matters of legislative discretion. State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227.

The legislature has discretionary power to direct the assessment of the entire or any part of the cost of a local improvement upon the land it benefits. Bauman v. Reas, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966.

It is not now debatable but that the legislature may authorize the imposition of special assessments for special road or street improvements at will. Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 687, 24 L. ed. 1098.

It is well-settled law, according to Chancellor Nicholson, of Delaware, that the whole subject of taxing districts belongs to the legislature; that the apportionment between the public and the local owners is within the power of the legislature; and that the legislature may fix upon the basis of apportionmined by whether the property so assessed can be drained by said sewerage.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, 153 Ill. 649, 39 N. E. 1077; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New Britain, 49 Conn. 40; Bickerdike v. Chicago, 185 Ill. 280, 56 N. E. 1096; State, Paterson & H. River R. Co., Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 54 N. J. L. 340, 23 Atl. 945.

Property is liable for benefit assessment for street paving, sewers, etc., under a constitutional provision exempting it from taxation of any kind.

Kansas City Exposition Driving Park v. Kansas City, 174 Mo. 425, 74 S. W. 979; Zable v. Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home, 92 Ky. 89, 13 L.R.A. 668, 17 S. W. 212.

The freight and passenger depot are benefited by the reason of the construction of sanitary sewerage in the streets in front of same.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Peterson, 5 Kan. App. 103, 48 Pac. 877; Mt. Pleasant

v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 138 Pa. 365, 11 L.R.A. 520, 20 Atl. 1052.

Winslow, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Janesville, having adopted those provisions of the general city charter law relating to the building of sewers (§§ 925-208 to 925-239, Stat. 1898), proceeded to construct sanitary sewers in certain streets of the city, and levy assessments against adjoining real estate at the uniform rate of 40 cents per linear foot to pay a part of the expense. The railroad company owns and operates a railroad running through the city upon a right of way 100 feet in width, and also owns several tracts of land adjoining said right of way and fronting on certain of the streets in which sewers were laid. Upon one of these tracts is a freight depot, and upon others are warehouses and other buildings rented by the company to private parties, which are ment between individuals. English v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 63, 37 Atl. 158.

It is competent for the legislature to provide for the expense of local improvements either by general taxation upon all the local property or by special assessments upon property adjacent to and benefited by such improvements. Burnett v. Sacramento, supra; Re Van Antwerp, 56 N. Y. 261.

It is within the power of the legislature to require that the expense of constructing drains, sewers, and the like, should be met, in whole or in part, by local assessments upon persons or property benefited or deemed to be benefited. English v. Wilmington, supra.

The legislature may provide for local improvements of a degree of public utility or in a sense of a public character, and impose the cost thereof on the property or district to be specially benefited in any manner not manifestly unfair or unequal. Garvin v. Daussman, 114 Ind. 429, 5 Am. St. Rep. 637, 16 N. E. 826.

It is competent for the legislature by statute to authorize the assessment of the entire cost of a street improvement upon property fronting thereon, provided such assessment does not exceed the benefits conferred upon such property by the improvement. State v. Bayonne, 56 N. J. L. 297, 28 Atl. 713.

But the legislature is not limited in assessing the cost of a local improvement upon property adjacent thereto, to the actual increase in the value of the property assessed resulting from such improvement. Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N. W. 242; Roberts v. First Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 504, 79 N. W. 1049; Webster v. Fargo, 9 N. D. 208, 56 L.R.A. 156, 82 N. W. 732.

A state legislature has the constitutional power to create special taxing districts, and direct the cost of local improvements in such 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

districts to be assessed, wholly or partly, upon the property therein. Webster v. Fargo, 181 U. S. 394, 45 L. ed. 912, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 623; Seattle v. Kelleher, 195 U. S. 351, 49 L. ed. 232, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44.

In exercising the taxing power for local improvements, the legislature may create special taxing districts, without regard to the boundaries of counties, townships, or municipalities. Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124.

The legislature may declare conclusively that only the property within a taxing district it has created by law shall be specially assessed on account of a local improvement within that district. Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L.R.A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484, 57 N. E. 114; Martin v. Wills, 157 Ind. 153, 60 N. E. 1021.

The matter of assigning districts to be assessed for the cost of a local improvement belongs to the legislature, and its judgment must control unless it has plainly and manifestly passed beyond the constitutional limits of the legislative power. Newman v. Emporia, 41 Kan. 583, 21 Pac. 593.

The Congress of the United States has constitutional power, in providing for the opening and extension of streets in the District of Columbia, and the condemnation of lands for the purpose, to require the cost thereof to be assessed, to the extent of one half or more, arbitrarily upon the abutting lands and lands benefited by the improvement. Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 45 L. ed. 900, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616.

The legislature may, instead of fixing and prescribing the taxing district itself, refer the matter to commissioners or local boards or bodies to ascertain and determine; and in such case the delegated bodies possess and exercise legislative functions, and their action must be deemed as conclusive upon the subject as if the legislature itself had reached by short spur tracks branching off from the main line. The city levied sewer assessments at the uniform rate aforesaid against all of these parcels which fronted on the line of the sewers outside of the 100-foot right of way. The company paid the assessments so made against those parts of such parcels upon which the warehouses were located, but declined to pay the assessments against the freight depot property and the strips 17 feet wide, upon which the spur tracks were located, and brought this action in equity to set aside the last-named assessments on the ground that such property was not subject to assessment. After trial the court sustained the assessments against the freight depot property and against all but two of the strips on which the spur tracks are situated, but set aside the assessments as to the last-named strips, because they were found not to be actually benefited, and each party appealed from that part of the judgment adverse to its contention.

The leading contention made by the plaintiff is that the lands on which its freight depot and spur tracks are situated are not subject to assessment for local improvements, because they are a part of an entirety composed of the whole property, real and personal, of a public service corporation, and hence are not severable. The general doctrine that the franchises of such a corporation, together with the property owned by it which is necessary for its use in order to accomplish the purposes of its directly exercised the authority. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2.

The legislature has the constitutional power to authorize municipal corporations to assess the cost of local improvements upon property benefited. Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615.

The legislature has the power to authorize a municipality to make repairs and renewals of streets within the corporate limits, and assess the costs thereof upon the lots and parts of lots fronting upon the work done. Covington v. Boyle, 6 Bush, 204.

c. Nature.

1. The taxing power.

A formidable array of cases, and at the present day the great weight of authority, attribute the power to impose special assessments for local improvements to the taxing power. There were in earlier times several dissentients from this view, but in most of the jurisdictions to which it was not subscribed changes in the Constitutions have given it ascendancy. Illinois is the conspicuous example in this respect.

It is now quite generally conceded, said the court in Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8, that special assessments, though savoring in some measure of the exercise of the right of eminent domain, are nevertheless included in and governed generally by the principles of the sovereign power of taxation.

No good can result from a discussion of the nature of special assessments, or the fundamental difference between such assessments and ordinary taxation, said the court in Hackworth v. Ottumwa, 114 Iowa, 467, 87 N. W. 424. But the foundation of the power to levy special assessments is the right of taxation, rather than the police power or the right of eminent domain.

There is much discussion in the books, said the court in King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2, as to whether an assessment for local improvements is a tax or not, but whatever may be the true doctrine it must be conceded the authority to make such an assessment is necessarily lodged in the taxing power. This has been held so often that the controversy must be held as closed.

The power to make assessments on abutting lands to pay for the improvement of streets has been, according to the court in Independence v. Gates, 110 Mo. 374, 19 S. W. 728, the prolific source of much discussion, and difficulty seems to have existed in tracing it to its true source; but it is settled in Missouri and generally elsewhere that it is referable to the taxing power.

It is now a settled law in this court, it was declared in Meier v. St. Louis, 180 Mo. 391, 79 S. W. 955, that special assessments for local improvements are referable to the taxing power.

Under the law of the state, said the court in Heman Constr. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 206 Mo. 172, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 104 S. W. 67, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 630, as declared by the higher courts, it is well settled that special assessments for local improvements are a constitutional exercise of the taxing power.

A special tax upon property in a designated district, to be paid for the construction or purchase of a high road laid by statute, is an assessment, of benefit to the persons and property taxed, made by the legislature in the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation. Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124.

An assessment to pay for a local improvement must rest for its validity upon its being a legitimate exercise of the taxing power. Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76, 73 Am. Dec. 518.

The authority to lay special assessments springs from the general power of taxation. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

Local assessments are special and individual taxation. Parker's Appeal, 169 Pa. 433, 32 Atl. 574.

Their imposition is an exercise of the taxing power. Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L.R.A. 135, 30 Pac. 1041.

An assessment for a local improvement is existence, constitute an entirety, which is not ordinarily subject to division by sale of a part on court or tax process, is firmly established in this court. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Forest County, 95 Wis. 80, 70 N. W. 77, and cases cited. This principle, however, is subject to the exception that such sale and division may be authorized by special legislative authority. Ordinary statutory provisions, merely general in their nature, will not be construed as intended to apply to such property, but the legislature has full power over the subject, and may by specific provisions accomplish the result. The general principle is well illustrated in the case of Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 506, 28 L.R.A. 249, 62 N. W. 417, where the city had attempted to assess a strip of the right of way of the company for the paving of an adjoining street. It was contended in that case that the provisions of subdivision 14, § 1038, Rev. Stat. 1878 (being the same as subdivision 14, § 1038, Stat. 1898), exempting railway property from general taxation, "excepting that the same shall be subject to special assessments for local improvements in cities and villages," made the right of way subject to assessment under the general provisions of the city charter authorizing assessments against adjoining real estate. It was held, however, that the exception in the exemption statute was not an affirmative declaration making railroad property subject to special assessment, but simply confined the a species of tax. People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 306; Rich v. Woods, 118 Ky. 865, 82 S. W. 578; Re Van Antwerp, 56 N. Y. 261.

It is a branch of or included within the taxing power. English v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 63, 37 Atl. 158; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Elmhurst, 165 Ill. 148, 46 N. E. 437; Monroe County v. Harrell, supra; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 300, 51 L.R.A. 763, 83 N. W. 1074; Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1; Baltimore v. Boyd, 64 Md. 10, 20 Atl. 1028; Howe v. Cambridge, 114 Mass. 388; Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L.R.A. 642, 51 N. E. 204; Dexter v. Boston, 176 Mass. 247, 79 Am. St. Rep. 306, 57 N. E. 379; White v. Gove, 183 Mass. 333, 67 N. E. 359; Harwood v. Street Comrs. 183 Mass. 348, 67 N. E. 362; Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 274; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367; Macon v. Patty, 57 Miss. 378, 34 Am. Rep. 451; Edwards House Co. v. Jackson, 91 Miss. 429, 45 So. 14; Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 525; St. Joseph use of Gibson v. Farrell, 106 Mo. 437, 17 S. W. 497; Moberly v. Hogan, 131 Mo. 19, 32 S. W. 1014; Heeman v. Allen, 156 Mo. 534, 57 S. W. 559, affirmed in 181 U. S. 402, 45 L. ed. 922, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645; State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227; State, Agens, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729; Litchfield v. Vernon, 41 N. Y. 123; Genet v. Brooklyn, 99 N. Y. 296, 1 N. E. 777; People ex rel. Scott v. Pitt, 169 N. Y. 521, 58 L.R.A. 372, 62 N. E. 662, affirming 64 App. Div. 316, 72 N. Y. Supp. 191; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 149 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069; Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N. W. 242; Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289; Jones v. Holzapfel, 11 Okla. 405, 68 Pac. 511; Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615; Re Centre Street, 115 Pa. 247, 8 Atl. 56; Winoona & St. P. R. Co. v. Watertown, 1 S. D. 46, 44 N. W. 1072; Adams v. Roanoke, 102 Va. 53, 45 S. E. 881; Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 243.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

A statute providing for local improvements in public streets, the expense of which shall be borne partly by those immediately interested and whose estates are thereby benefited, is a mode of taxation which the legislature is constitutionally competent to adopt. Howe v. Cambridge, 114 Mass. 388.

It is a legitimate exercise of the taxing power for the legislature to authorize the whole cost of a local improvement, such as opening, grading, and paving streets, to be assessed upon lands which by reason of their peculiar location may be regarded as benefited. State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227.

In all cases of assessments for improvements, whether the sum to be raised is apportioned according to benefits, or according to value, upon the front foot, square foot, square acre, or where each owner is required to pay for the improvement in front of his own land, the assessment must be referred to the taxing power, and not the power of eminent domain,—the different modes being but different ways of apportioning the tax, and not the exercise of different sovereign powers. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345; Emery v. Bradford, 29 Cal. 75; Walsh v. Mathews, 29 Cal. 123.

2. The power of eminent domain.

As long as the Constitution of 1848 of the state of Illinois remained unchanged, it was the doctrine of the courts of that state that special assessments for the cost of local improvements were sustainable only under the power of eminent domain.

The leading case in which this doctrine was expounded and applied as a controlling principle of decision was that of Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203.

The position taken by the court in that case was that the property of a citizen of a constitutional state can be taken from him by the power of the state in one of four ways only, viz.: (1) For taxes; (2) for the public use; (3) as a penalty for the infraction of public law; and (4) to satisfy exemption to the subject of general taxation, and that the general provisions of the city charter providing for special assessments did not show a legislative intention that a portion of a railroad right of way should be so assessed and severed by sale for nonpayment of the assessment. In the discussion of the question it was said that the principle is established that "such a result cannot be effected under the power of taxation without express legislative authority, and that general language in such statutes will not be held to authorize such a result." Since the decision of that case, however, the legislature has in no uncertain terms made express provision for the levying of such assessments against such property. Chapter 425, p. 688, Laws 1903, provides, among other things, that the property of railroad corporations "shall be in all respects subject to all special assessments for local improvements, in the same manner and to the same extent as the property of individuals." This is an express and unambiguous declaration by the legislature upon a subject over which it has full power, which closes the question. It is instructive, also, to note that, by the same law, it is provided that such assessments may be collected by ordinary action at law, thus obviating all practical danger of a sale and consequent severance of a part of the corporate property. It must therefore be held that all of the property assessed in the present case was subject to assessment, although it was a part of the entirety.

his debts; and that power of every description must be referred to some source. The power to make special assessments must therefore be referred to the power either of taxation or of eminent domain; and whether referred to the one or the other, it must of necessity be exercised under the constitutional restraints, if any, that hedge the employment of either one. If, then, such assessments are taxes, they must, under the Constitution of the state, be uniform and equal in incidence, and imposed upon property ad valorem, but this they are not, especially if arbitrarily laid according to the frontage of the assessed property in a limited area. If they rest upon the right of eminent domain, then, by the Constitution, compensation must be made to those from whom they are exacted.

It is, said the court, the element in special assessments of compensatory benefits, which has reconciled this court to their imposition, and induced the court to range the power to make them under the power of eminent domain, the "just compensation" being the benefit flowing to the property holder from the improvement, and which is required to be estimated together with the damages. No case can be found, it continued, decided by this court on a principle variant from this,—the equation of benefit and burden forming the ground work of all of them.

The decision was followed in Chicago v. Home Bank, 34 Ill. 283, a case identical in principal in every respect; and the doctrine was adhered to in Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 211, wherein an assessment for a sidewalk was vacated because being apportioned by the front-foot rule, it violated one or both of the aforementioned constitutional provisions.

The doctrine was again recognized and applied in Bedard v. Hall, 44 Ill. 91, the court there saying: We do not deem it necessary to go over the ground again occupied in the Larned Case. We have recognized that case, and the principles therein established, in the case of Ottawa v. Spencer, supra.

Later, however, the Constitution of Illinois was changed, and thereafter the courts 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

attributed the laying of special assessments to the taxing power. Under the Illinois Constitution of 1848, it was said in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, 153 Ill. 649, 39 N. E. 1077, the power to levy and collect special taxes was held to have its source in the constitutional provisions relating to the right of eminent domain; but under the present Constitution special taxation of contiguous property and special assessments for local improvements are held to be branches of the taxing power.

In virtually all of the other states of the Union it has been denied from the beginning that the power of imposing special assessments to pay for local improvements is any part of the power of eminent domain.

Some confusion of ideas, said the court in Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345, may formerly have arisen from a supposition that an apportionment of the cost of a local improvement according to benefits involved the principle of specific compensation for property taken, and still more from not separating and keeping distinctly in view the operation of the two powers of taxation and eminent domain in the class of cases involving both, as where land had been taken for a new street, and at the same time an assessment made upon the owners of the property in the district embracing the new street, including the owner of the land taken to pay for the land thus appropriated.

The taxing of estates especially benefited by a local improvement in a public street, to defray the expense of making it, is an exercise of the power of taxation, and distinguishable from an exercise of the right of eminent domain. Howe v. Cambridge, 114 Mass. 388.

Constitutional provisions forbidding the appropriation of private property to public use or to be taken for public improvements in cities and villages without the consent of its owner, unless just compensation is made, do not apply to special taxes or assessments laid upon property to pay for local improvements. Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

The second contention of the railroad company is that the assessments are invalid because made for arbitrary sums by the front-foot rule, and not in proportion to benefits actually received. The sections of the general charter law under which they were made (§§ 925-216 to 925-218, Stat. 1898) provide for the making of assessments against adjoining lots at an even rate not exceeding $2 nor less than 25 cents per linear foot on the whole frontage of each lot. There are no provisions for the ascertainment of actual benefits nor for the limitation of the assessments to the amount of actual benefits received. So the contention becomes primarily a contention against the validity of the law, and, if the law be valid, the assessments themselves are valid, because they were made in accordance with the terms of the law. This court has held that where assessments for local improvement are required to be assessed according to the benefits accruing to each parcel, an assessment of a level rate by the front-foot rule, while not necessarily void, will be held invalid, unless it appears that the assessing board has considered the matter and determined that the benefits are in fact proportionate to the frontage of each parcel. Hayes v. Douglas County, 92 Wis. 429, 31 L.R.A. 213, 53 Am. St. Rep. 926, 65 N. W. 482; Hennessy v. Douglas County, 99 Wis. 129, 74 N. W. 983; Sanderson v. Herman, 108 Wis. 662, 84 N. W. 890, 85 N. W. 141. These cases, however, have no bearing on the question

Special assessments upon abutting property to defray the cost of street improvements are not affected by constitutional restrictions upon the power of eminent domain. Edwards House Co. v. Jackson, 91 Miss. 429, 45 So. 14.

The imposition of special assessments to defray the cost of a local improvement upon property benefited by such improvement is in no sense a taking of property by right of eminent domain. Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615.

It is not in any proper sense a taking of property for public use without just compensation. Re Dorrance Street, 4 R. I. 230.

The legislature, in authorizing the whole cost of a local improvement to be assessed upon lands benefited by it, does not violate a constitutional prohibition against taking private property for public use without just compensation. State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227.

Whether the taking of private property in the opening of a street, and apportioning the expenses among the owners of adjacent property, would be within the prohibition of a constitutional provision forbidding private property to be taken for public use without just compensation, said the court in Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76, 73 Am. Dec. 518, it is unnecessary to determine. This question does not properly arise in the case at bar. Here there has been no exercise of the right of eminent domain. No private property has been taken for public use from the plaintiff. His land remains untouched. The street was previously opened, and it is that which has been improved by grading. The assessment is the tax levied to meet the expenses of the improvement.

An assessment laid upon abutting property for the cost of a local improvement is not an exercise of the power of eminent domain. Hayden v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 817; Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L.R.A. 402, 11 S. E. 802; Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 274.

It does not come within the purview of 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

such power. Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L.R.A. 642, 51 N. E. 204.

It is not referable to it. Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 149 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069.

The power of eminent domain is not the foundation of the power to levy special assessments. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 300, 51 L.R.A. 763, 83 N. W. 1074.

Nor the source. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Elmhurst, 165 Ill. 148, 46 N. E. 437.

The two powers are wholly unrelated. Palmyra v. Morton, 25 Mo. 593.

We consider, said the court in Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 106, the decided weight of authority is opposed to the doctrine that special benefits accruing from a public improvement can be assessed against the property so benefited under the power of eminent domain.

That the imposition of a tax or assessment after the repaving of an existing city street is an exercise of the taxing power, and not of the law of eminent domain, said the court in Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1, has been so frequently decided not only by this court, but by the courts of other states, that the controversy which may once have existed upon the subject must be regarded as closed.

3. The police power.

There are certain local improvements made in the exercise of the police power. The theory, for example, upon which a sewer system is provided by the public is that it is a sanitary measure. The drainage of adjacent lands is merely incidental; the primary object is the promotion of the general health of the public. Toledo use of Gates v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 4 Ohio C. C. 113.

Whether the means to pay for improvements of this sort are raised by general taxation or by special assessments upon property immediately concerned, it is gen-before us, because the statute before us does not require the assessment to be in proportion to benefits received. The simple question here is whether a law is constitutional which provides for the assessment of a fixed proportion of the cost of a public sanitary sewer against adjoining lots by the front-foot rule.

The decisions upon the general question of the validity of special assessment laws which do not provide for assessments to be made in proportion to the benefits received are very numerous and conflicting. A treatise might easily be written upon the subject, but no attempt will be made to write such a treatise here, as the writer fears that such attempt might result in a collection of words without knowledge, which erally agreed that in providing the required funds the taxing power is invoked.

The power to levy special assessments in general is not founded in the police power of the state. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 300, 51 L.R.A. 763, 83 N. W. 1074.

General police powers are not enforced by special taxation or assessment. Palmer v. Danville, 154 Ill. 156, 38 N. E. 1067.

An assessment for the cost of a sidewalk or a sewer, apportioned upon the assessed property according to the frontage upon the line of the improvement, or according to the area of the property within the prescribed district, may be sustained as an exercise of the police power, the province of which is the preservation of order and the making of rules and regulations conducive to the health, comfort, and protection of society, and not primarily for revenue. Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 106; Keese v. Denver, 10 Colo. 112, 15 Pac. 825.

The right of a municipal corporation to require a landowner to pave the sidewalk in front of his property may be derived from its duty to protect the public health and to prevent nuisances, and is a mere police regulation. Palmyra v. Morton, 25 Mo. 593.

A municipal ordinance requiring lot owners along a given street to construct sidewalks in front of their respective lots, at their own cost, is constitutional and valid when made under express legislative authority, and is not an exercise of the power of taxation, but is a police regulation in the nature of the abatement of a nuisance. Franklin v. Maberry, 6 Humph. 368, 44 Am. Dec. 315; Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 177.

The police power may justify requiring a landowner to construct, at his own expense, a sidewalk in front of his land, or a lateral connection between his dwelling and a sewer, and, perhaps, to tap a water main for domestic use, and therefore will sustain arbitrary assessments for any of these purposes; but it will not support arbitrary assessments, beyond or in disregard of the special and peculiar benefits conferred upon the property charged, for construct-merely darken counsel. It is well settled that assessments against adjoining property are not limited to benefits received, where such assessments are properly made under the police power. Thus, the court has held that the entire cost of a sidewalk may be properly assessed against the adjoining lot without reference to or ascertainment of actual benefits. Hennessey v. Douglas County, supra; Lisbon Ave. Land Co. v. Lake, 134 Wis. 470, 113 N. W. 1099. In the last case it was held that, inasmuch as the presence of a defective and dangerous sidewalk constituted a serious public inconvenience and danger, the city might, under the police power, be clothed with the right to build or repair it at once without notice, and to charge the entire expense ing the highway, a trunk sewer, or a water main for the public. Doughten v. Camden, 72 N. J. L. 451, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 817, 111 Am. St. Rep. 680, 63 Atl. 170, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 902.

The assessment of lands along the line of municipal water mains, according to frontage and without regard to value, to pay bonds issued to construct the water system, cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power. Stehmeyer v. Charleston, 53 S. C. 259, 31 S. E. 322.

A local assessment for the cost of a sidewalk, if invalid as an exercise of the taxing power or the power of eminent domain, either for want of equality and uniformity in apportioning it and lack of foundation ad valorem, or because not compensated for by special benefits to the assessed property, cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power. Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 211.

The court cited this case, and reaffirmed the proposition that local improvements of either sidewalks or streets could not be compelled under the general police power, in Gridley v. Bloomington, 88 Ill. 554, 30 Am. Rep. 566. And followed the latter case again in Chicago v. Crosby, 111 Ill. 538.

Under the Colorado Constitution the power to make special assessments for local improvements must be confined to purposes within the domain of police regulations. Pueblo v. Robinson, 12 Colo. 593, 21 Pac. 899.

The decisions in Colorado are to the effect that assessments against property specially benefited by local improvements cannot be upheld under the uniformity rule of taxation, according to the court in Pueblo v. Robinson, supra, unless the improvements are clearly within the domain of police regulations.

III. Distinction between taxes and assessments.

All the courts, in varying but strikingly similar language, have recognized a distinction between taxes in the generic sense and assessments to pay for local improvements, to the abutting lot upon which it stands, regardless of the question of the amount of benefit actually conferred. A defective sidewalk is a menace to the public safety, and its presence in a public street is quite analogous to the presence of a disease-breeding cesspool upon private property, which, under well-established principles, may be removed by the public authorities, and the expense thereof charged to the property, if the statute so authorize. The decisions are quite unanimous upon this question, and may be found collated in 2 Cooley on Taxation, 3d ed. pp. 1128-1130. Upon the last-named page Judge Cooley proceeds as follows: "There seems to be no legal impediment to a requirement under the police power that lot owners in cities and villages shall be at the expense of constructing that portion of the public sewer in front of their respective premises,"—citing Van Wagoner v. Paterson, 67 N. J. L. 455, 51 Atl. 922. See also Gleason v. Waukesha County, 103 Wis. 225, 79 N. W. 249. There certainly is no fault in this line of reasoning. The preservation of public health from danger resulting from the accumulation of sewage upon private property in cities is fully as persuasive a justification for the exercise of the police power as the preservation of life and limb from the dangers resulting from defective or snow-covered sidewalks. So far as this court has spoken on the subject, it has sustained the right to make sewerage assessments upon the front-foot rule, without regard to the extent of benebut they have been content to assert the existence of such a distinction and to catalogue the principal characteristics of the two forms of exactions without explaining why, upon principle or in reason, a distinction should be made, except by general references to peculiar compensatory benefits flowing from improvements, on account of which assessments are made.

The power of assessment, though springing from it, is not to be confounded with the general power of taxation. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

Assessments to pay for the improvement of streets in a city, though referable to the taxing power, are not taxes in the sense that that word is usually employed. Independence v. Gates, 110 Mo. 374, 19 S. W. 728.

Special assessments for local improvements are not taxes in the strict sense of that term. Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566, 6 L.R.A. 155, 22 N. E. 624.

The words "taxation" and "assessment" represent different modes of exercising the taxing power, and indicate different objects and purposes in aid of which the taxing power may be invoked. Taylor v. Palmer, supra.

In origin and legal or constitutional complexion, "taxes" and "assessments" are the same; but in the method of imposing them, and in the effect of their imposition upon the taxpayer, they are essentially different, and should in these respects be considered and treated as separate and distinct. Ibid.

There is, according to the court in Neehan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 525, a broad distinction, and one of universal recognition, between the foundation upon which is based the right of general taxation for governmental purpose and that which supports the right of local assessment. The authority to impose either is referred to the taxing power. The object of one widely differs from that of the other.

The principles that govern the general burdens imposed for state and municipal purposes do not apply to that peculiar species of taxation, local assessments. Sands 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 571, 31 Am. Rep. 742.

The words "tax" and "taxation" and the term "special assessment" have well-understood meanings in the courts and by the public, differing from each other. Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Watertown, 1 S. D. 46, 44 N. W. 1072.

Assessments for local improvements are not within the meaning of the term "taxation" as usually employed in Constitutions and statutes. Allen v. Galveston, 51 Tex. 302.

While the question has heretofore been the subject of much controversy in the courts, said the court in Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 667, 27 Pac. 557, we think the doctrine is well established at this time that the general use of the term "taxes" in the Constitution does not necessarily include what is meant by the term "assessments" in connection with street and other local improvements, but applies only to the larger exercise of the sovereign power of the state, either directly or through its inferior instrumentalities of county, city, town, school districts, etc., in raising general revenues for the support and maintenance of government.

Assessments upon the owners of adjacent property, to pay the expenses incident to the paving of streets in cities, are not taxes in the ordinary sense of the term, but rather charges upon the land inseparably incident to its location in respect to other property. Baltimore v. Boyd, 64 Md. 10, 20 Atl. 1029.

That a distinction exists between local assessments and taxes levied for the general purposes of revenue, said the court in Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L.R.A. 135, 30 Pac. 1041, is now recognized by an almost unbroken line of decisions and by the consensus of opinion of all text writers upon the subject; local assessments are upheld upon the theory that the property against which the assessment is made is specially benefited by the improvement, while taxes refer more particularly to those burdens imposed for revenue.

Taxes are imposed upon persons; assessments upon property. Taxes differ from

fts. Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326, 51 N. W. 566. See also Blount v. Janesville, 31 Wis. 648. The provisions of the general charter in question evidently contemplate that all the property drained by the system shall be assessed at an even rate, so that each parcel shall pay approximately its proportionate share of the cost of what may be called merely a service sewer, while the additional expense of main or trunk sewers, made necessary in order to conduct away the combined output of the minor service sewers, shall be borne by the entire district. If this be, as we hold it is, a legitimate exercise of the police power, there are no constitutional objections, either national or state, which stand in the way. See French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625.

It follows from these considerations that the assessments in question should all have been sustained.

Those parts of the judgment from which the plaintiff appeals are affirmed, and those parts from which the city appeals are reversed, with directions to enter judgment in accordance with this opinion, the city to recover one bill of costs in this court.

assessments for local improvements. Taxes are burdens upon all persons and property alike, and are compensated for by equal protection to all; while assessments are not burdens but equivalents laid for local purposes upon local objects, and compensated for, to some extent, in local benefits to the property assessed. Hayden v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 817.

A special assessment is unlike an ordinary tax, because its proceeds must be expended in an improvement from which a benefit clearly exceptive and plainly perceived must inure to the property on which it is imposed. Macon v. Patty, 57 Miss. 378, 34 Am. Rep. 451.

All the cases decided by this court, so far as we have examined, it was said in the opinion in Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203, hold that special assessments are not taxes, for the reason, as plainly appears from the opinions delivered, that, when laid in the ratio of benefits, they are not burdens.

Special assessments and special taxes imposed for local improvements, unlike general taxes, are based upon benefits to the property against and upon which they are assessed and levied, arising from its increased value in consequence of the improvement. Lightner v. Peoria, 150 Ill. 80, 37 N. E. 69.

Special taxation in Illinois differs from the assessment of special benefits only that, in the one, the benefits are ascertained in a mode prescribed by law; in the other, they are determined by the municipal authorities. Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L.R.A. 563, 33 N. E. 888.

Special taxes are not regarded as burdens, but are imposed as an equivalent or compensation for the enhanced value, real or presumptive, from the public improvement for which they are assessed. Ibid.

In the case of Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240, Sanderson, J., in delivering the opinion of the majority of the court, commented upon the previous decision in Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345. In that case we held, said he, that the word "assessment" as employed in the Constitution, while it represented in part the general power of taxation vested in the government, was used to designate a particular branch of that power, specifically different in its purpose and mode of working from that intended by the more general and comprehensive term of "taxation." That, by the latter, the power of imposing taxes upon the property of the citizen generally for the support of the government was intended, and by the former, the power of imposing a tax, for the purpose of improving the streets of cities and incorporated villages, upon the property bordering upon or in the vicinity of the improvement. That the power of taxation, as contradistinguished from assessment, was intended to be exercised upon the ad valorem principle, and in such a manner as to secure equality and uniformity; but that the power of assessment, as contradistinguished from that of taxation, need not be exercised upon the ad valorem principle, but, on the contrary, that the legislature was at liberty to adopt a different mode or basis of apportionment,—such as frontage, benefit received, or superficial contents.

IV. Constitutional limitations of the power of arbitrary assessment.

a. The taxing power.

1. In general.

The power of the legislature to lay taxes for public purposes is unlimited, where it is not specifically restrained by the Constitution. Re Van Antwerp, 56 N. Y. 261; Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124.

That a statute is unjust does not make it unconstitutional. Praigg v. Western Paving & Supply Co. 143 Ind. 358, 42 N. E. 750.

Constitutional limitations upon the power of the legislature to levy taxes do not restrict its power to authorize municipalities to impose special assessments for street improvements. Storrie v. Woessner (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 837; Harrell v. Storrie (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 838.

A restriction or regulation in the organic law, upon the right or manner of levying taxes, does not apply to special assessments or the mode of imposing them. Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Watertown, 1 S. D. 46, 44 N. W. 1072.

2. Requirement that taxation shall be equal.

In almost every one of the state Constitutions there is some limitation upon the taxing power, and as the impositions of special assessments to defray the cost of a local improvement are generally recognized to be exercises of the taxing power, the question of their constitutionality is often a vital one. One of the simple limitations upon the power to tax is a requirement that all taxation shall be equal.

But all taxation is declared to be more or less unfair and in any proper sense even unequal. Re Dorrance Street, 4 R. I. 230.

No law for the assessment of taxes has ever been framed, or ever will be while man continues in his present imperfect condition, according to the court in Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560, which will operate with perfect equality and justice upon all.

Equality of public burdens cannot be attained, according to the court in Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 177, by any device that the wit of man has ever yet suggested.

In spite of all the precautions that the wit of man has ever been able to devise, taxation cannot be made to operate equally and justly on every individual. People ex rel. Scott v. Pitt, 169 N. Y. 521, 58 L.R.A. 372, 62 N. E. 662, affirming 64 App. Div. 316, 72 N. Y. Supp. 191.

An equality of burden is no more attainable through special assessments than by general taxation.

The courts have repeatedly declared absolute equality to be unattainable when assessments are imposed for the expense of local improvements, and that all that is necessary to their validity is that equality shall be approximated. Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Pueblo v. Robinson, 12 Colo. 593, 21 Pac. 899; Denver v. Kennedy, 33 Colo. 80, 80 Pac. 122, 467; Denver v. Dumars, 33 Colo. 94, 80 Pac. 114; Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L.R.A. 563, 33 N. E. 888; Lightner v. Peoria, 150 Ill. 80, 37 N. E. 69; Lexington v. McQuillan, 9 Dana, 513, 35 Am. Dec. 159; Howell v. Bristol, 8 Bush, 493; Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 78 Ky. 357; Edwards House Co. v. Jackson, 91 Miss. 429, 45 So. 14; State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227; State, VanSolingen, Prosecutor, v. Harrison, 39 N. J. L. 51; People ex rel. O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 App. Div. 326, 99 N. Y. Supp. 657; Connor v. Cincinnati, 5 Ohio C. D. 199.

Absolute and exact equality in apportioning an assessment for a local improvement is neither expected nor required. Kansas City v. Gibson, 66 Kan. 501, 72 Pac. 222.

Exact equality of benefits among those taxed is never attainable. Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115.

It is impossible to form any general rule of assessment that will produce exact uniformity and equal justice in all cases. Har- 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

risburg v. McCormick, 129 Pa. 213, 18 Atl. 126.

While a local assessment or tax for a local benefit should be distributed among and imposed upon all equally in the like relation, that equality can never be but an approximation. Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174.

An assessment for the cost of a local improvement can never be computed upon any hypothesis with exact equality and fairness. Donovan v. Oswego, 90 App. Div. 397, 86 N. Y. Supp. 155.

A constitutional requirement of equality of taxation has no intrinsic application to a special assessment laid for a local purpose, and apportioning such an assessment according to the front-foot rule is not repugnant to such requirement. Tripp v. Yankton, 10 S. D. 516, 74 N. W. 447.

Taxation according to benefits received does not conflict with constitutional provisions protective of property against unjust and unequal taxation. Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255.

A constitutional declaration that the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among the citizens is not infringed by legislation providing for the assessment of local taxes to defray the cost of benefits derived from local improvements. Re Dorrance Street, supra.

Neither does it invalidate a local assessment by the front-foot rule imposed for such a purpose. Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50.

The only basis upon which any method of apportioning an assessment for the cost of a local improvement can be sustained is that it is reasonably calculated to bring about a substantial proportional distribution of the burden according to benefits. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2.

Whatever rule for apportioning benefits in levying assessments for constructing sewers the legislature may prescribe, that rule must be one which it is legally possible to apply justly and equally to the persons assessed. Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155, 24 Am. Rep. 535.

No plan of apportionment can be adopted in laying assessments for the cost of local improvements which will result in gross inequality of taxation. State v. Pillsbury, 82 Minn. 359, 85 N. W. 175.

A statute providing that a definite portion of the expense of a local improvement in a public street shall be assessed upon the abutters in just proportion, deducting from the assessments all sums which may have been previously paid to the city by the taxpayer for previous improvements of such street, plainly requires the assessment to be made equally upon the abutting estates, which, from the nature of the work, must be immediately benefited; and is a rule of proportionment, uniform without the taxing district, that sufficiently approaches equality. Howe v. Cambridge, 114 Mass. 388.

It was decided in Lexington v. McQuillan, supra, according to Covington v.

Worthington, 88 Ky. 206, 10 S. W. 790, 11 S. W. 1038, that the special tax upon lots bordering upon a street improvement, according to the number of front feet in each, was universal in its application and produced a constitutional equality of burden, when directly authorized in express terms by a municipal charter granted by the legislature.

The levy of a tax for the improvement of a highroad in a limited territory upon abutting land, rated by the number of acres in each owner's tract, approaches equality as nearly as specific taxation can be expected to approximate equality, and therefore, cannot be adjudged unconstitutional. Malchus v. District of Highlands, 4 Bush, 547.

3. Requirement that taxation shall be uniform.

A not uncommon constitutional provision is one requiring all taxes to be uniform. Such a provision does not differ essentially from one requiring all taxation to be equal. Uniformity in taxation, it has been said, implies equality in the burden of taxation, and this equality in the burden constitutes the very substance designed to be secured by a constitutional requirement that the rule of taxation shall be uniform. Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 243.

A constitutional provision requiring the rule of taxation to be uniform extends to all taxation, whether imposed by the state directly or by subordinate governmental corporations acting under delegated authority. Ibid.

The courts have frequently declared in general terms that special taxes or assessments laid upon property to meet the cost of local improvements must be uniform. They mean, however, that they must bear alike upon all property within the assessment district. That uniformity must be the principle of apportionment among the parcels of property subject to assessment. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moline, 158 Ill. 64, 41 N. E. 877; Ware v. Jerseyville, 158 Ill. 234, 41 N. E. 736.

An assessment upon abutting property for the expense of improving a street, either apportioned according to frontage or ad valorem, must be uniform, operating alike upon all the parcels of land so abutting and assessed. Corry v. Folz, 29 Ohio St. 320.

For whatever sum an assessment is made for a street improvement upon abutting property, it must, to be valid, be levied at a uniform rate upon all the property assessed. Jaeger v. Burr, 36 Ohio St. 164.

A constitutional requirement that all taxes shall be uniform does not limit the general power to make local assessments to pay for local improvements. Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L.R.A. 135, 30 Pac. 1041.

A constitutional provision requiring all taxation to be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and to be levied and collected under general laws, has no application to assessment for local improvements. Anderson v. Lower Merion Twp. 217 Pa. 369, 66 Atl. 1115; Merrifield v. Scranton City, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 388.

Constitutional provisions respecting uniformity of taxation do not apply to special assessments to pay for local improvements, but only to taxation in the general and ordinary sense of the term. Meier v. St. Louis, 180 Mo. 391, 79 S. W. 955; Heman Constr. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 206 Mo. 172, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 104 S. W. 67, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 630.

An act of the legislature authorizing a municipality to assess the cost of grading and paving streets against abutting properties according to the front width thereof, to the middle of every improved street, is not in conflict with a constitutional provision that all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws. Beaumont v. Wilkes-Barre, 142 Pa. 198, 21 Atl. 888.

Neither is the assessment for such an improvement of a city street, laid upon abutting property according to the front-foot rule, obnoxious to such a constitutional provision. Shoemaker v. Harrisburg, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 86; Merrifield v. Scranton City, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 388.

A constitutional requirement that revenue laws shall have uniform effect on all private property does not apply to an annual assessment laid, on account of a city water main, upon abutting property on the street through which it runs, which makes no use of the water. Richmond & A. R. Co. v. Lynchburg, 81 Va. 473.

But an assessment upon a city lot on which no water is used, laid on account of a water main through the street in front of it, is simply a general tax, which falls within the scope of a constitutional requirement that taxation shall be uniform. Jones v. Water Comrs. 34 Mich. 273.

A constitutional requirement for the legislature to provide a uniform rule of taxation does not affect special assessments laid upon property benefited to defray the cost of local improvements, pursuant to a statute enacted prior to the adoption of the Constitution, until the legislature has complied with the constitutional requirement, and enacted a statute providing a uniform rule of taxation. Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

A provision in a municipal charter empowering the common council to cause the streets to be graded and paved, and assess the whole expense of so doing in front of any particular lot, to the centre of the street, upon such lot, and making the assessment a lien upon the premises and a personal charge against the owner, is unconstitutional because, considered as an exercise of the taxing power, it disregards uniformity of apportionment, and it cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power, because individuals cannot be compelled under that power to make such improvements at their own expense. Motz v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

4. Requirement that taxation shall be both equal and uniform.

A constitutional provision met with more frequently is one which requires taxation to be both equal and uniform throughout the state.

Such a provision is held to apply only to that charge or imposition upon property which it is necessary to levy to raise funds to defray the expenses of the state and local governments, and to have no reference or application to special assessments for local improvements, by which private persons are chiefly benefited through the increased value of their property. Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76, 73 Am. Dec. 518; Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345; Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240; Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497; New Orleans v. Elliott, 10 La. Ann. 59; Re Casacalvo & M. Streets, 20 La. Ann. 497; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Cogreve, 41 La. Ann. 251, 5 So. 848; Rosetta Gravel, Paving & Improv. Co. v. Jollisaint, 51 La. Ann. 804, 25 So. 477.

Special assessments for local public improvements are not within a constitutional provision requiring taxation to be equal and uniform. Edwards House Co. v. Jackson, 91 Miss. 429, 45 So. 14; Warren v. Henly, 31 Iowa, 31; King v. Portland, 2 Or. 146.

The line of decisions seemed to the court, in King v. Portland, supra, to be unbroken in establishing the conclusion that the word "taxation," as used in constitutional provisions commanding equality and uniformity in the levying of taxes, is limited to the means of raising money to meet the general expenses of the government.

But, while this is true, uniformity in the manner of assessment of special taxes, and approximate equality in the amount of the exactions, are attainable and are essential to the constitutionality of such taxation. Howell v. Bristol, 8 Bush, 493.

Although an assessment for a local improvement is not governed by a constitutional provision requiring property to be taxed ad valorem, it is still a tax, and must rest equally and uniformly upon all the assessed property, and therefore must be laid according to some rule of apportionment. Such an assessment may be apportioned by the number of feet fronting on the improvement, or by any other standard, but it must approximate equality and uniformity. People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 306.

Whichever mode of assessment is adopted by a municipality empowered by the legislature to choose either the frontage rule or the ad valorem rule, it must, in either case, make the assessment uniform and equal upon all the property assessed. Jaeger v. Burr, 36 Ohio St. 164.

It is an underlying and fundamental principle in the exercise of the power of assessment that, whatever rule be adopted to make the assessment, it must be uniform and equal according to the benefits, so that all will be treated alike under the law. Bailey v. Zanesville, 20 Ohio C. C. 236.

A constitutional requirement of a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation is satisfied when the rate of assessment for a local improvement is uniform and equal throughout the locality where it is imposed. Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 339.

The imposition of a personal liability upon a landowner for an assessment upon his property for a street improvement violates a constitutional provision for equality and uniformity of taxation, and is therefore void. Asberry v. Roanoke, 91 Va. 562, 42 L.R.A. 636, 22 S. E. 360.

5. Requirement that taxation shall be ad valorem.

An ordinary constitutional provision requiring all taxes levied upon property to be laid in proportion to its value does not apply to special assessments for the cost of local improvements. Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461, 8 L.R.A. 369, 7 So. 386; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 306.

An assessment upon abutting property for the improvement of a street does not fall within a constitutional provision requiring all taxation to be uniform upon the same class of subjects and ad valorem on all taxable property within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax. Hayden v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 817; Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L.R.A. 402, 11 S. E. 802.

The authorities are uniform, said the court in Jones v. Holzapfel, 11 Okla. 405, 68 Pac. 511, to the effect that assessments against abutting lots for the purpose of defraying the cost of local improvements are not part of the general taxes imposed for the purpose of carrying on the ordinary expenses of the state, and therefore do not come within the provision of the organic law which requires that all taxes shall be ad valorem.

The objection to the validity of an assessment for a street improvement, that it is not made upon the estate proportionally and equally in reference to the value of the several lots to which the improvement is appurtenant, based upon principles of constitutional and statute law applying more particularly to taxation for general purposes of state, county, and town expenditures, and having no direct bearing upon special assessments for local improvements authorized by special statute, is not well founded. Lowell v. Hadley, 8 Met. 180.

Yet in South Carolina it has been held that a system of special assessments upon lands abutting on city streets in which water mains are laid, imposed according to frontage and without regard to the value of the assessed property, to pay bonds issued to construct the municipal waterworks, violates a constitutional provision commanding taxes to be laid upon all taxable property according to its value. Stehmeyer v. Charleston, 53 S. C. 259, 31 S. E. 322.

6. Requirement that taxation shall be ad valorem and imposed by uniform rule.

A constitutional provision requiring laws to be passed taxing, by uniform rule, all property according to its true value in money, has no application to special assessments for the cost of local improvements, but relates solely to general taxation. Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N. W. 242; Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289; Ernst v. Kunkle, 5 Ohio St. 520; Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333; Ridenour v. Saffin, 1 Handy (Ohio) 464.

Constitutional provisions requiring a uniform rule of taxation and a cash valuation of property assessed for taxation do not apply to local assessments for street improvements, but relate only to the valuation of property and its taxation for general purposes. Motz v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

An act of the legislature chartering a city, and providing that each street or part of a street improved shall be a taxing district for the purpose of meeting the cost of the improvement, and directing an assessment of a part of such cost upon the abutting property according to its frontage, does not violate a constitutional provision requiring all taxes to be uniform and enjoining a uniform rule for taxing real estate ad valorem. Hilliard v. Ashville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 149 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069.

Charges for the cost of a local improvement against the property benefited by the improvement, although an exercise of the taxing power, are not such taxes as are referred to, nor are they embraced or intended to be embraced, in constitutional provisions requiring taxes to be levied and collected only for public purposes, to be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and requiring all property subject to taxation to be taxed ad valorem. Farrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 379.

A different opinion as to the effect of such a constitutional provision upon special assessments laid without regard to the value of the assessed property has been expressed by the courts in New Jersey, Arkansas, and Colorado. The leading case in Arkansas has been much criticized elsewhere, and the Colorado courts have retreated from the position first assumed.

A constitutional provision that property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws and by uniform rules, according to its value, operates to prevent any tax being laid upon property which is not determined either by a special benefit derived, or by a valuation of the property at its true value according to a uniform rule. Jersey City v. State, 43 N. J. L. 638.

Under the New Jersey Constitution it is not within the power of the legislature to lay an arbitrary assessment for a specific part of the cost of a public improvement upon an abutting landowner. Van Wagener v. Paterson, 67 N. J. L. 455, 51 Atl. 922.

A legislative grant of power to a municipality to impose an arbitrary burden upon abutting land for the expense of laying a water pipe in a public street, a part of a system for supplying water both for public purposes and to citizens for a price paid, cannot be sustained under the general power of taxation, when the Constitution provides that property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws and uniform rules according to its true value. Doughten v. Camden, 72 N. J. L. 451, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 817, 111 Am. St. Rep. 680, 63 Atl. 170, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 902.

If, according to the court in that case, a legislative grant of power to impose an arbitrary assessment for such an expense upon abutting property ever could have been held a constitutional exercise of the taxing power, that ceased to be the case upon the adoption of such constitutional provision. Ibid.

A Constitution that requires laws to be passed taxing by a uniform rule all real and personal property according to its true value in money; that commands legislation respecting municipal corporations restricting their powers of taxation and assessment to prevent abuse; and denies to the legislature power to authorize any municipality to levy any tax upon real or personal property in excess of a stated percentage of its assessed value, renders invalid and void a municipal assessment for the cost of grading, curbing, and paving a city street, upon abutting property, in proportion to the number of feet fronting on the line of the improvement. Peay v. Little Rock, 32 Ark. 31.

The decision in Peay v. Little Rock, supra, that municipal assessments for street improvements must be ad valorem, and not according to frontage, was thus stated and relied upon in Monticello v. Banks, 48 Ark. 251, 2 S. W. 852, as the sole authority for nullifying a municipal assessment for paving a street, for want of uniformity and disregard of the element of value in the assessed property.

The case of Peay v. Little Rock, supra, was cited in Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 667, 27 Pac. 557, as the only case holding under a constitutional provision requiring equality and uniformity and ad valorem taxation, similar in terms of the Constitution of the state of Washington, that an assessment according to frontage was not lawful. This case, said the Washington court, shows that the supreme court of Arkansas based its decision mainly upon the older cases in Illinois and Wisconsin, some of which have since been overruled in the states where they were made, and the argument in it is so clearly, as we think, based upon the theory that there can be no valid local assessment, that the value of the decision, as one of authority, is destroyed.

Upon a careful examination of the authorities, and upon principle, we are satisfied, declared the court in Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 106, that the taxing power does not extend, under the Constitution of this state, to local or special assessments, except under the constitutional rule. That is to say, it was the opinion of the court that the provision of the Colorado Constitution requiring all taxes to be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and to be levied and collected under general laws prescribing rules and regulations designed to secure a just valuation of the property taxed, embraced local assessments to defray the cost of local improvements.

This doctrine commanded the approval of the court in Wilson v. Chilcott, 12 Colo. 600, 21 Pac. 901, in which an assessment for street gutters and curbstones was declared void for conflict with the Constitution in the respects mentioned.

The objection that the assessments are illegal because not based upon value, benefits, or improvements, said the court in Keese v. Denver, 10 Colo. 112, 15 Pac. 825, raises the question of the validity of the provision of the statute authorizing the cost of sewers to be assessed upon the property in the district according to area. The doctrine announced in Palmer v. Way, supra, is decisive of the question.

Afterwards, however, in the case of Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L.R.A. 135, 30 Pac. 1041, this doctrine was repudiated and the cases announcing it were overruled. Chief Justice Hayt, who delivered the opinion of the majority of the court (Elliott, J., dissented), put it thus: Turning to the case of Palmer v. Way, supra, said he, we find the contention there to have been with reference to an assessment for the cost of a sidewalk in front of certain lots. The assessment was upheld as properly within the police power of the city. This was the only determination necessary to support the judgment there the subject of attack. The court did, however, go beyond this in the opinion filed, and say that special assessments against the abutting lots, for street improvements, were in violation of the constitutional rule requiring uniformity of taxation, and could not be upheld under the taxing power. This decision was followed in Wilson v. Chilcott, supra, without question and without the examination that would otherwise have been given it. And thus an opinion upon a matter not necessary to the determination of the case under consideration at the time has been accepted as the law in this state for ten years upon the principle of stare decisis. . . . We feel constrained by strong logical reasons, as well as by the overwhelming weight of authority, to say that the uniformity of taxation enjoined 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

by the Constitution does not prohibit the legislature from authorizing the levy of special assessments in cities and towns for local improvements in the nature of benefits to the abutting property.

7. Requirement that taxation shall be equal, uniform, and ad valorem.

A constitutional provision requiring taxation to be equal and uniform throughout the state, and all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law, does not apply to special assessments upon property benefited, to defray the cost of local improvements. Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367; Macon v. Patty, 57 Miss. 378, 34 Am. Rep. 451; Norfolk v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. 224.

A constitutional provision requiring taxation to be equal and uniform, and all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, does not prevent the legislature from authorizing assessments upon abutting property for street improvements, to be made according to frontage. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345; Emery v. Bradford, 29 Cal. 75; Walsh v. Mathews, 29 Cal. 123.

An assessment for a local improvement, made by a municipal corporation conformable to a provision in its charter, upon lands benefited by the improvement, according to their frontage upon the line of the work, is not in contravention of a constitutional provision requiring all taxes to be equal and uniform, and to be laid according to value. Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 667, 27 Pac. 557.

A constitutional provision requiring the legislature to prescribe by law a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, does not prohibit the laying of assessments for local improvements upon property benefited thereby, provided they are equal and uniform within the locality covered by the assessed property. Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 339.

The distinction under a Constitution requiring taxation to be equal and uniform, and all property to be taxed ad valorem, between an assessment for a local improvement and a general tax, said the court in Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497, "may be said to have already become firmly fixed in the constitutional jurisprudence of the state" of California, "and we think it too late to question its soundness now, even if we really entertained a doubt of its correctness in the abstract, which we do not."

A tax for opening and improving a street, or for another local improvement, is a municipal tax for a corporate purpose; and under a Constitution authorizing the legislature to empower municipalities to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, but requiring such taxes to be equal, uniform, and ad valorem, the levy of special assessments upon property benefited by a local improvement to meet its cost is prohibited when such property is charged with more than its proportionate share of the burden as measured by the benefits conferred. Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566, 6 L.R.A. 155, 22 N. E. 624.

Water rates paid by consumers under a statute incorporating water commissioners of a city cannot be classed as either local assessments or specific taxation, and therefore must be governed by the constitutional rule of uniformity of taxation and assessment according to the cash value of the property burdened. Therefore, when such rates are charged upon lots in proportion to their frontage, they are unconstitutional and void even if specifically authorized by the act of the legislature. Jones v. Water Comrs. 34 Mich. 273.

In McBean v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 349, 24 Am. Rep. 308, it was held that the then existing Constitution of Tennessee, in expressly commanding property to be taxed ad valorem and upon the principle of equality and uniformity, and tax in counties and incorporated towns to be laid upon the same principle established in regard to city taxation, regulated the whole subject of taxation, both general and special, inclusive of assessments for local improvements, and therefore that an assessment upon the basis of the frontage of lots upon a street, to pay for the cost of improving such street, is absolutely void. The case was subsequently overruled in Arnold v. Knoxville, 115 Tenn. 195, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 837, 90 S. W. 469, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 881.

In some of the states, as Illinois, Wisconsin, Tennessee, and Alabama, under their earlier Constitutions, according to the court in Austin v. Seattle, supra, in which there was no particular mention of assessments or special taxes, but only a general provision that taxes should be equal and uniform and according to value, it was held by the courts of those states that there could be no such thing as a special local assessment upon a portion of the property within the limits of a municipal corporation, to defray the expenses of local improvements peculiar to such local areas, the theory of those courts being that any improvement made by a municipal corporation which would authorize taxes of any kind to pay for it must be a public improvement, and therefore must be paid by the public generally, through the levy of taxes on the whole community.

8. The Constitutions of Illinois.

By the Illinois Constitution of 1848 taxation in the state was required to be ad valorem, and local taxes to be uniform with respect of persons and property within the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities. Under that Constitution a section of a municipal charter authorizing the assessment of the cost of improving any street or highway upon the abutting real estate, to be made in such a manner as nearly as may be that each separate block, lot, etc., on either side should bear the cost of making or completing the improvement upon the half of the way directly adjacent to or in front of it, was held void. Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203; Chicago v. Home Bank, 34 Ill. 283.

In the first of these cases the court laid stress upon the fact that it was engaged in construing and applying provisions of the Constitution of the state of Illinois that were different in language from the somewhat similar provisions in the Constitutions of other states, and that in some states,—New York, for example,—constitutional requirements of uniformity and equality of taxation were wholly wanting. The decisions, therefore, of other states ought not, in the court's esteem, to control its judgment.

The doctrines of these cases, and the conclusions announced in them, were unreservedly accepted and followed in the subsequent case of Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 211.

And conformably to these cases an assessment upon the size or width of a parcel of land, without reference to its value, was held invalid in Holbrook v. Dickinson, 46 Ill. 285, because it was deemed repugnant to the constitutional requirement of equality, uniformity, and ad valorem taxation.

Following its previous decisions, and upon their authority, the court in St. John v. East St. Louis, 50 Ill. 92, held unconstitutional and void a municipal ordinance assessing the total cost of a street improvement upon property fronting upon it, without regard to actual resulting benefits; and again, in Crete v. Chicago, 56 Ill. 422, that evidence that an assessment for a street improvement had been apportioned according to the frontage of the lots assessed on the street improved ought to be received in a litigation over the assessment, because it would go to show that the constitutional requirement of equal uniform and ad valorem taxation had been violated.

In Lee v. Ruggles, 62 Ill. 427, the court adhered to its prior opinions, and consistently held unconstitutional and void a tax assessed upon lands to provide for the drainage of a district containing them, because it was laid according to the acreage alone, without regard either to their value or the benefits they might derive from the drainage system.

These, and other decisions to the same effect, rendered while the Constitution of 1848 remained in force, ceased to be authorities when the organic law was changed in 1870. White v. People, 94 Ill. 604.

In 1870 there was introduced into the Constitution of Illinois a provision (art. 9, § 9) reading as follows: The general assembly may vest the corporate authorities of cities, towns, and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessments, or by special taxation of contiguous property, or otherwise.

Property in contiguity to a local improvement may, since then, be charged in Illinois with the whole or a part of the cost of such improvement, in either of two ways, viz., by a special assessment, or by special taxation. Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 11, 7 N. E. 471.

If it is specially assessed, rather than specially taxed, it must and only can be assessed in proportion to the special benefits conferred upon it by the improvement. Ibid.

Under that provision the legislature may authorize local improvements to be made by special assessments to the extent that the assessed property shall be benefited, or by special taxation of the assessed property according either to its frontage or value. Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566, 6 L.R.A. 155, 22 N. E. 624.

A municipal ordinance requiring the cost of improving a street to be met by special taxation of abutting real estate in proportion to its frontage has, since the adoption of the Constitution of 1870, been lawful. Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 269, 11 N. E. 261; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Elmhurst, 165 Ill. 148, 46 N. E. 437.

In Springfield v. Green, supra, such an ordinance was objected to as unconstitutional. This objection, said the court, citing Chicago v. Larned, supra, would have been good under the Constitution of 1848, but the reverse of this is now the rule where the cost of the improvement is to be met by special taxation. The change in the ruling upon the question is based primarily upon the difference between the present Constitution and the Constitution of 1848, and, also, in part, upon the construction of the present statute relating to local improvements by municipal corporations,—a construction that recognizes a difference between a special assessment and special taxation in respect of the right of the owners of the property assessed to have the question of benefits passed upon by a jury.

9. The Constitutions of Alabama.

It was held in Mobile v. Dargan, 45 Ala. 310, and Mobile v. Royal Street R. Co. 45 Ala. 322, that an assessment for the cost of a street improvement, laid upon abutting property in proportion to its frontage, violated a provision of the then state Constitution that expressly commanded all taxes levied in the state upon property to be assessed in exact proportion to the value of such property, and therefore was void. These decisions were afterwards overruled upon the distinct ground that special assessments laid against abutting property, to pay for street improvements which benefit and enhance the value of such property, are in no sense taxes within the meaning of such a constitutional provision. Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461, 8 L.R.A. 369, 7 So. 386.

Alabama has since incorporated in her Constitution a section (No. 223) which provides that "no city, town, or other municipality shall make any assessment for the cost of sidewalks or street paving, or for the cost of the construction of any sewers, against property abutting in such street or sidewalk so paved or drained by such sewers, in excess of the increased value of such property by reason of the special benefits derived from such improvements."

That provision has been held not to restrict the method, nor to inhibit the adoption of any particular standard of measurement in laying special assessments to meet the cost of local improvements, so long as the stated limitation is observed and respected. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187, 93 Am. St. Rep. 20, 33 So. 678.

That provision does not prevent assessments by the front-foot rule, provided the constitutional limit is respected and the property owner is afforded proper opportunity to be heard upon the question of benefits. Harton v. Avondale, 147 Ala. 458, 41 So. 934.

But an assessment for a local street improvement laid upon the abutting property, no matter what rule of apportionment is adopted in laying it, can, under such provision, in no case exceed the increased value to the assessed property due to special benefits that result from the improvement. Ibid.

If, in the assessment of abutting property to pay for a local street improvement the special benefits of the improvement to the assessed property in enhancing its value are ignored, and the constitutional limit in this respect is exceeded, the property owner may resort to the courts for redress. Ibid.

10. Review of constitutional requirements of equal, uniform, and ad valorem taxation in relation to assessments.

In Arnold v. Knoxville, 115 Tenn. 195, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 837, 90 S. W. 469, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 881, the court, in overruling the case of McBean v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 349, 24 Am. Rep. 308, reviewed that decision very fully, and said, granting the premises therein laid down as the controlling feature in the case, and the conclusion reached is inevitable and irresistible. This controlling feature may be briefly stated to be that special assessments for local purposes fall within the meaning of taxes in the sense in which that term is used in our Constitution, and hence they cannot be maintained, because they are not imposed upon the entire property of a state, county, or municipality, but only upon real estate in a particular locality, that they are not equal and uniform within the state, county, or municipality, as the case may be, and not laid according to value.

If we grant that special assessments for local purposes fall within the provisions of article 2, §§ 28 and 29, of the Constitution, and are taxes within the meaning of those sections, then they cannot be sustained as constitutional, and the present act must be declared invalid.

The McBean Case, and the other cases based upon it, are founded upon the ruling that special assessments do fall within the provisions of these sections, and the provisions of the statute authorizing them not being in conformity with the fundamental principle of equality, uniformity, and generality, such statute is invalid.

This question is therefore the crucial one in the case; and with it decided there remains but little ground for controversy.

Briefly stated, it was held in the McBean Case that taxes could be laid for public purposes only and according to some rule of apportionment, and that equality was of the essence of the power. Hence a state burden of taxation could not be laid upon any territory less than the whole state, a county tax must be laid upon the entire county, and a city tax upon the whole of the city, and these requirements are denominated as fundamental.

It was further held that the Constitution of Tennessee does not recognize the principle that taxation may be apportioned according to benefits received, but that all taxation must be imposed upon the fundamental principles of equality and uniformity, and this necessarily and expressly excludes the power to levy a tax upon any other basis or principle, either for general or local purposes.

It was also held that the constitutional provision provided the only legitimate means and modes of providing revenues for the state, counties, and municipal corporations, and such revenues could only be raised under that authority, and in the manner prescribed by it; and that no change in name, such as calling the imposition a special assessment, could change the essential nature of the thing, so as to escape constitutional regulation by a mere play upon words, or by giving the laying of taxes a different name or designation.

It was further held that apart, from the exercise of the taxing power, property cannot be taken to satisfy what is called a "special assessment," unless under the exercise of eminent domain, and then by making just compensation to the individual, and not to the public generally.

It was also held that an assessment for improvements, based on the frontage of lots on the streets to be improved, was absolutely void, and contained no element of equality and uniformity, if considered as a tax, and gave no compensation to the lot owners, if considered as an exercise of eminent domain.

The text-books on constitutional and municipal law present an unbroken line in opposition to the doctrines thus laid down, and are based upon the view that there is a material and fundamental difference between special assessments for local purposes and general taxation for governmental purposes, as provided in the Constitutions of the various states.

The court, after quoting from the standard authors, added: Leaving the realm of the text-writers, and coming to the adjudications of the courts, we find that, with the exception of Tennessee and possibly South Carolina, from the Supreme Court of the United States, through an unbroken line of more than forty states, the legality and validity of special assessments for local purposes has been sustained.

Of these states, Arkansas, Illinois, Minnesota, and Nebraska have constitutional provisions authorizing special assessments, although in Arkansas and Illinois they were recognized before the adoption of the present Constitutions.

Florida, Kansas, and Wisconsin have Constitutions which require equality and uniformity, but do not require taxation according to value.

Constitutions requiring taxation to be uniform within certain territorial limits or on the same class of subjects are Colorado, Georgia, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

Constitutions requiring equality, uniformity, and taxation according to value are Arkansas, Georgia, Indiana, Louisiana, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Michigan, and Mississippi.

Constitutions requiring taxation according to value, with or without uniformity and equality, are Alabama, Arkansas, California, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, Texas, Washington, and West Virginia.

It will be seen that there are three Constitutions requiring uniformity or equality, or both, and not expressly taxation by value, all of which have been construed as permitting special assessments; although the rule is qualified in Wisconsin; second, that there are ten Constitutions requiring equality, uniformity, and taxation according to value, eight of which have been construed as permitting special assessments, the exceptions being South Carolina and Tennessee; third, that there are twenty-one Constitutions which expressly require taxation according to value, nineteen of which have been construed as permitting special assessments, the exceptions being South Carolina and Tennessee.

While special assessments are in the nature of taxation, still they are not taxation for general governmental purposes, in the sense provided for in the Constitution. They are different in many respects. Some of these differences are pointed out in the cases. By an unbroken line of authorities, except Tennessee, it has been held that the legislature may authorize municipalities to make such assessments. The cases hold that such assessments, based upon a special benefit accruing to the assessed property, do not fall within the constitutional inhibition against taking private property for public use without compensation. See the authorities collated in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1177-1183, inclusive.

And it is likewise held that the burden may be apportioned between the property owners themselves, according to actual benefits expected, or according to value, or, in some jurisdictions, according to area or frontage, as the legislature may direct. The most equitable plan of apportionment appears to be an assessment according to value and benefits received, and it has been held that in assessments based upon value, the worth of the improvements should be deducted. These features of the case are also discussed fully in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1197-1201, inclusive, and the cases there collated.

As to the other details of making such assessments, to what extent they may go, what provisions may be valid, and what not, we refer again to the excellent article in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1166-1245.

These details are not now before us, but we have before us only the general question of the constitutional right to make special assessments for local purposes.

Notwithstanding this array of authority two of the justices, McAlister and Neil, dissented.

b. The power of eminent domain.

The language of the Constitutions in some few states, restraining the power of eminent domain, is different from the prevailing and conventional verbiage employed elsewhere, and is such that the courts of those states have held it to impose limits upon the power to assess property for local improvements.

It has been decided in Texas that a statute authorizing a municipality to improve the public streets at the cost of the owners of abutting property, in proportion to frontage, and without regard to special benefits conferred, violates constitutional provisions against taking, damaging, or destroying property for the public use without the consent of its owner and without adequate compensation, and against the destruction of property except by the due course of the law of the land. Hutcheson v. Storrie, 92 Tex. 685, 45 L.R.A. 289, 71 Am. St. Rep. 884, 51 S. W. 848.

The provisions of the Kentucky Constitution declaring all freemen equal, and no man or set of men entitled to exclusive separate public emoluments or privileges from the community, but in consideration of public services, and prohibiting any man's property to be taken or applied to public use without the consent of his representatives and just compensation, were held in Sutton v. Louisville, 5 Dana, 28, to have been violated by an act of the legislature empowering a municipal corporation, in opening or extending streets, to assess and collect as well the value of advantages as of damages which would accrue to any of the citizens in consequence of such improvement upon adjoining property, and by an assessment made by the corporation under the authority of such act.

The argument of the court upon which it based its conclusion was that an assessment for a street opening could not properly be considered as of the nature of a public tax, because it was not a duty or contribution levy by a fixed rule, and because also it was not common, but was restricted to the owners of one particular lot of ground. Therefore, that it must be considered as an attempt to take private property for public use without a just compensation paid or secured to be paid to the owner, and only on the unsubstantial opinion of twelve men that an equivalent would in some way and at some time be enjoyed by such owners in the enhancement of the vendable price of their ground.

A statute conferring upon a municipality power to assess property abutting on streets for the improvement thereof in proportion to its frontage is not in conflict with a constitutional provision declaring that when private property is taken for public use in making or repairing roads the owners shall be compensated therefor in money, without deduction for benefits. Ridenour v. Saffin, 1 Handy (Ohio) 464.

c. The Federal Constitution.

The imposition of special assessments upon landed property within limited areas, to pay for neighborhood improvements, apportioned by arbitrary rules, has been assailed as contrary to the terms of the 1st section of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, forbidding any state to make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; or to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; or to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Of this section, Mr. Justice Swayne, in his dissent in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394, well said: No searching analysis is necessary to eliminate its meaning. Its language is intelligible and direct. Nothing can be more transparent. Every word employed has an established signification. There is no room for construction. There is nothing to construe. . . . "Due process of law" is the application of the law as it exists in the fair and regular course of administrative procedure. The "equal protection of laws" places all upon a footing of legal equality and gives the same protection to all for the preservation of life, liberty, and property, and the pursuit of happiness. The success of the assault has not been conspicuous.

Naturally one turns first to the decisions of the Federal courts upon the subject. The Supreme Court has declared broadly that the fact that an assessment for the cost of a local improvement is unequal as regards the benefits conferred is not a matter in which state authorities are controlled by the Federal Constitution. Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192.

And in the same case it was specifically decided that a state statute empowering a municipality to open and construct streets, avenues, roads, lanes, and alleys at the exclusive cost of abutting lot owners, equally apportioned according to the number of square feet owned by them respectively, except that corner lots shall pay 25 per centum more, does not deprive the assessed landowners of their property without due process of law, nor deny them the equal protection of the laws. Ibid.

The Supreme Court, however, did decide in the case of Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187, that when a municipality condemns a strip of land for a new street, through the property of a single landowner, and then arbitrarily by the front-foot rule assesses back upon the land he has left on each side of the strip appropriated the entire sum awarded him as damages for the land taken, together with all the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings, in legal effect, it deprives the landowner of his property without compensation and without due process of law, and denies to him the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and therefore that the assessment is illegal and void.

That is to say, as a court elsewhere in following that decision put the case: Any statute which authorizes a municipal corporation to take private property for a public highway in such a manner as will not only exempt the municipality from compensating the owners for the property taken, but will also impose upon such owners, under the form of an assessment by the front foot, the burden of compensating themselves, or of returning to the city all that they may be entitled to receive as compensation for their property appropriated, lacks that due process of law required by the Federal Constitution, and is therefore, so far as the assessment is concerned, void. Scott v. Toledo, 1. L.R.A. 688, 36 Fed. 385.

The case of Norwood v. Baker, supra, was an extreme one. The village of Norwood, Ohio, exercising the right of eminent domain, appropriated for a new street a strip of land 50 feet wide and 300 feet long, running wholly through a tract of land belonging to the plaintiff, Mrs. Baker. For the land taken she was awarded and paid $2,000 damages. Her remaining land abutted on each side of the new street, and comprised the only land which did abut upon it. The village assessed this remaining land, and none other, arbitrarily according to the front-foot rule, without giving any consideration whatever to the question of benefits, and charged the property with the total cost of the entire improvement, including the compensation which had been paid for the strip of land appropriated and all additional expenses. Virtually the village seized Mrs. Baker's property without paying her for it, and compelled her to pay for being despoiled.

The case was distinguished in Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 45 L. ed. 900, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, involving the constitutionality of an act of Congress regulating assessments on landed property in the District of Columbia, and in which it was held that congressional jurisdiction of the subject was not controlled by the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The decision in Norwood v. Baker, supra, was generally understood as ruling that the arbitrary imposition according to the front-foot rule of any assessment upon property, to defray the cost of a local improvement, in which special resulting benefits were not taken into account and found to be equivalent to the charge, was a deprivation of property without due process of law and a denial of equal protection of the laws, in contravention of the 14th Amendment.

Accordingly, in Fay v. Springfield, 94 Fed. 409, under the supposed authority of that decision, a statute of Missouri authorizing assessments of the cost of repaving streets in cities of the third class upon abutting property, apportioned by the front-foot rule, without regard to whether or not the land assessed was benefited by such repaving to the extent of the assessments, and without affording landowners an opportunity to contest the actuality of such benefits, was held to be unconstitutional and void.

In deference to the same supposed authority, like decisions were made in Cowley v. Spokane, 99 Fed. 840; Charles v. Marion, 100 Fed. 538; Zehnder v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 106 Fed. 103, respecting similar legislation in Washington, Indiana, and Kentucky; and in Bidwell v. Huff, 103 Fed. 362, the constitutionality of a similar assessment made under the laws of Georgia was impugned.

None of these cases is now regarded as sound, and the Kentucky decision has been expressly overruled. Zehnder v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 108 Fed. 570.

This result is attributable to a series of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States, by which that of Norwood v. Baker, supra, was strictly limited to extraordinary cases of the same kind.

The series just mentioned began with French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625, in which it was adjudged that an assessment by the front-foot rule of city lots of uniform size and approximately equal value, all occupied as private dwelling places of the same general class, for the cost of paving the abutting street, alike throughout at substantially the same grade, under an orderly scheme of local improvement prescribed by the state legislature and approved by the state courts, violates no provision of the Federal Constitution.

The other cases in the series referred to are all in harmony with the French Case, and are as follows: Tonawanda v. Lyon, 181 U. S. 389, 45 L. ed. 908, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Cass Farm Co. v. Detroit, 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Detroit v. Parker, 181 U. S. 399, 45

L. ed. 917, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Shumate v. Heman, 181 U. S. 402, 45 L. ed. 922, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645; King v. Portland, 184 U. S. 61, 46 L. ed. 431, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; Chadwick v. Kelly, 187 U. S. 540, 47 L. ed. 293, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175; Schaefer v. Werling, 188 U. S. 516, 47 L. ed. 570, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449.

And, according to Mr. Justice Holmes, in the opinion of the majority of the court in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 197 U. S. 430, 49 L. ed. 819, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466, it is now established beyond permissible controversy, that laws providing that original public improvements shall be made at the exclusive cost of adjoining owners, and equally apportioned among them according to the number of feet owned by each, are not contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

In the case just cited it was held that an assessment for grading and paving a street carriage way, of the entire cost upon adjoining property, laid under statutory authority in proportion to the number of feet in the several parcels of land assessed, was not invalid by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, when imposed upon a part of a railroad right of way, notwithstanding the work was not only not beneficial, but positively injurious, to the property of the railroad.

The same objection that was made in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. supra, in form, but not in substance, according to Mr. Justice Holmes, was made in Martin v. District of Columbia, 205 U. S. 135, 51 L. ed. 743, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440, to the validity of an assessment for widening an alley in the city of Washington; but in the later case it was more effective. In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Holmes explained why the former case should not be deemed a controlling precedent. The assessment in question in that case, said he, was one for grading and paving, and it was pointed out that a legislature would be warranted in assuming that grading and paving streets in a good-sized city commonly would benefit adjoining land more than it would cost. The chance of the cost being greater than the benefit is slight, and the excess, if any, would be small. These and other considerations were thought to outweigh a merely logical or mathematical possibility on the other side, and to warrant sustaining an old and familiar method of taxation. It was emphasized that there should not be extracted from the very general language of the 14th Amendment a system of delusive exactness and merely logical form. But, he continued, when the chance of the cost exceeding the benefit grows large, and the amount of the not improbable excess is great, it may not follow that the case last cited will be a precedent; . . . It well might be that a form of assessment that would be valid for paving would not be valid for the more serious expenses involved in the taking of land. Such a distinction was relied on in French v. Barber Asphalt 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Paving Co. supra, to reconcile the decision in that case with Norwood v. Baker, supra.

In a series of decisions recently rendered, said the court in White v. Tacoma, 109 Fed. 32, the Supreme Court of the United States has corrected a common misunderstanding of the decision of that court in the case of Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187. In these several decisions the Supreme Court recognizes the fact that the per-front-foot plan may be a perfectly fair method of apportioning the burden of paying for street improvements, and that in cases in which it appears that assessments levied according to that plan are not in excess of the benefits to the property assessed, and are equal and fair, so that there is no ground for complaining of actual injustice, the assessments are not necessarily in violation of the Constitution of the United States merely because made according to the per-front-foot plan; and it is shown that no such inflexible rule was announced or intended by the court in its decision in the case of Norwood v. Baker. That decision, however, does emphatically declare these important principles: That state laws providing for assessing the cost of street improvements upon abutting property, which in practical operation do confiscate property, are obnoxious to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and for that reason it is the duty of the courts to declare them to be void. That special assessments to pay for local improvements of public streets and highways do, in practical effect, deprive owners of their property without due process of law, unless the property subject to assessment is benefited by the improvement correspondingly to the amount of the assessment. That owners of property have the right to appeal to the courts for judicial protection against the unconstitutional invasion of their rights by municipal governments, in enforcing state laws or local regulations for the collection of assessments which are in excess of the benefits to the property assessed, accruing or to accrue by reason of the improvements to be paid for by such assessments.

Where private property is benefited by public improvement, the assessment against it by the proper authority for its proportionate share for the cost of such improvement, not exceeding the benefit which the property derives by reason of such improvement, in no way increases the burden of the taxpayer, and does not constitute the taking of private property without due process of law, but is simply an assessment for benefits. Heman v. Allen, 156 Mo. 534, 57 S. W. 559, affirmed in 181 U. S. 402, 45 L. ed. 922, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645, on the authority of French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. supra.

An assessment of property for a street improvement according to its frontage, without reference to benefits, does not amount to a denial of the equal protection of the laws or of due process of the law to the owner of the property assessed, so as to be repugnant to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Ross v. Gates, 183 Mo. 338, 81 S. W. 1107.

A statute charging the entire cost of paving city streets against the abutting property, in proportion to its frontage, does not violate the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N.W. 242; Roberts v. First Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 504, 79 N. W. 1049; Webster v. Fargo, 9 N. D. 208, 56 L.R.A. 156, 82 N. W. 732.

In Cass Farm Co. v. Detroit, 124 Mich. 433, 83 N. W. 108, affirmed in 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644, the counsel for the property owner contended, upon the authority of Norwood v. Baker, that an inflexible rule requiring assessments in all cases to be imposed according to the frontage or area of the assessed property, regardless of the circumstances of the particular case, was but an arbitrary exaction, and hence unconstitutional for want of due process of law. In dealing with this contention, the state court referred to the cited decision as a street-opening case, holding that a law providing for the assessment of abutting property in proportion to its frontage of the entire cost of opening a new street, and resting upon a basis which excluded any consideration of benefits, was violative of the Constitution of the United States in denying due process of law, in depriving the citizen of his property. We should feel inclined, said the court, to follow the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Norwood v. Baker, supra, inasmuch as it was based upon the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, if that were a paving case, but that was a street-opening case, and until that court shall pass upon the question in the exact form in which it is here presented, we shall feel bound to follow our own decisions, which have settled the rule in this state, that in paving cases it is competent for the legislature to authorize the cost to be assessed upon the abutting property according to its frontage. This view received the approval of the United States Supreme Court when it affirmed the judgment, as has been stated above.

It was earnestly insisted in Hadley v. Dague, 130 Cal. 207, 62 Pac. 500, that the assessment there before the court was invalid because the statute under which it was laid was unconstitutional for arbitrarily apportioning the cost of the improvement according to the frontage of the assessed property, without requiring the assessments to be proportioned to benefits received. The constitutionality of the statute, said the court, has been upheld by this court so frequently that it is not an open question; but the appellants insist that the decision in Norwood v. Baker, is at variance with these decisions and requires them to be disregarded. If, it was added, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the facts and statute under which the present assessment was made were of the same character as those involved in that case, we would without hesitation accept that decision as conclusive upon us, but we are of the opinion that there is a marked distinction between the two cases, and that that decision is not applicable to the facts herein.

In San Francisco Paving Co. v. Bates, 134 Cal. 39, 66 Pac. 2, the California street assessment statute was again objected to as repugnant to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, in authorizing assessments according to the front-foot rule, and the decision in Norwood v. Baker, supra, was relied upon to make good the objection. But, said the court, that point was elaborately considered by this court in Hadley v. Dague, supra, and decided adversely to appellant's contention; the conclusion there reached has been approved in subsequent cases, and, although invited by appellant to overrule that case, we decline to do so, as we are satisfied with it as a final declaration of the law on the subject.

And again in Chapman v. Ames, 135 Cal. 246, 67 Pac. 1125, the court reaffirmed the decisions mentioned. "A careful examination of appellant's very able brief," said the court in the last case, "discloses no ground upon which these cases should be overruled or distinguished."

It is contended, said the court once more in German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Ramish, 138 Cal. 120, 69 Pac. 89, that the act is in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Plaintiff insists upon this point, notwithstanding this court in Hadley v. Dague, supra, has held adversely to this contention. We are not disposed to reopen this question. Hadley v. Dague, supra, was adhered to in San Francisco Paving Co. v. Bates, supra.

The supreme court of Alabama, in Montgomery v. Birdsong, 126 Ala. 632, 28 So. 522, held that a municipal charter providing for the assessment upon benefited property of not over half the cost of paving streets and of constructing sidewalks, and of not more than a quarter of such cost on either side of the street, and requiring the amounts assessed to be fair and reasonable, and further providing for correcting any errors or omissions in the assessments on complaint of any property owner, in no wise infringed the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, respecting due-process of law and equal protection of the laws, by also providing for the computation of the assessments upon opposite sides of the street in relation to each other according to the respective frontages, and limiting the charges to a stated maximum sum the front foot.

In Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 638, 37 So. 291, the court went beyond the decision just cited, and sustained, as a valid and constitutional exercise of the legislative power, an act of the legislature authorizing an issue of municipal bonds to defray the cost of improving a city street, and an assessment to meet them laid upon the abutting property prorated according to the frontage along the line of the work. In the opinion of the court, McClellan, Ch. J., cited the case of Montgomery v. Birdsong, supra, and said that all it had actually decided was that, in giving power to assess the cost of a street improvement upon abutting property, the city charter required an assessment against each parcel of land to be in proportion to, and not in excess of, the actual benefit accruing to such parcel, the court assuming, rather than deciding, that such a rule of assessment was essential to the validity of the statute. The subsequent case of Montgomery v. Foster, 133 Ala. 587, 32 So. 610, he went on to say, had merely followed in Birdsong Case in construing the Montgomery city charter. Having thus cleared the ground, the learned chief justice turned to the consideration of the constitutionality of assessments by the front-foot rule for local improvements, imposed under statutory authority, ignoring consideration of benefits. The question arises, said he, whether, in view of state and Federal constitutional provisions as to compensation for property taken for public uses, and depriving the citizen of property without due process of law, it is within legislative competency thus to impose the costs of street paving, and the like, upon abutting property, without judicial ascertainment of the benefits accruing to such property from such improvements, and apportionment of the costs of the betterments according to, and not in excess of, the actual benefits enuring from them to the several abutting lots of land. This question, he continued, has been thrashed over in numerous decisions of the courts, and, while the cases are not uniform upon it, the better view, and that supported by the great weight of authority, is that it is a matter of legislative expediency and for the legislative determination whether abutting urban property will be benefited to the extent of the costs of a given improvement of the street or sidewalks along its front, and therefore entirely within legislative competency to impose such costs by way of special tax upon the property abutting the improved street, apportioning the charge thereto according to the distance of the several parcels of land fronting upon the street. (In expressing these views the learned chief justice did not consider, and perhaps had no occasion to consider, the qualifying effect of § 223 of the Alabama Constitution, limiting assessments to the increase in value of the assessed property, which results from an improvement on account of which the assessment is made. Vide, Harton v. Avondale, 147 Ala. 458, 41 So. 934.)

In Harton v. Avondale, supra, the court repudiated, so far as the state of Alabama was concerned, and under its present Constitution, the doctrine of Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 650, 37 So. 291. As will be noticed, said Simpson, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in the latest of the 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

two cases, and referring to the earlier one and others, these decisions are based entirely on the construction of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, § 24, Bill of Rights of the Alabama Constitution of 1875, and upon the law as it stood before the adoption of our present Constitution. It was while the Norwood-Baker Case, in the United States Supreme Court, and the Birdsong Case, in our own court, were generally supposed to be the law, . . . that our constitutional convention of 1901 added to our Constitution § 223, forbidding assessments for local improvements in excess of the increased value of the assessed property by reason of the special benefits derived from such improvements. The conclusion is irresistible, continued Justice Simpson, that, with the lights before them, the intention of our Constitution makers was to fix this limit in our organic law beyond which any assessment should be void, and to authorize the courts to examine into the matter and determine whether or not the constitutional limit had been transcended. To hold otherwise would be to suppose that the makers of the Constitution had taken the trouble to formulate and adopt an absolutely meaningless new section to the Constitution. To say that assessments shall not be made beyond the benefits received, and yet that, when an assessment is made, either directly by the legislative action or by a rule prescribed by it which has no provision for inquiring into the benefits, and conclusively to presume that the benefits were ascertained and that the assessment was not in excess thereof, would render the constitutional provision absolutely inoperative. This constitutional provision has nothing to do with the manner, he proceeded, in which the assessment is apportioned, whether by front foot or otherwise, but only fixes a limit beyond which it cannot go. It necessarily follows that the property owner has the right, in some form and at some time, to contest the fact as to the benefits accruing, and to bring forward such testimony as he can produce on that matter. Any guaranty of the Constitution would be but a brutum fulmen, if there were no tribunal in which the citizen could demand the enforcement of his right. . . . It must be admitted . . . that it belongs to that class of rights which do not necessarily demand a regular jury trial. Nevertheless, it must be passed upon in some way, and if the original assessment is not laid by some proceeding in which the citizen has an opportunity to produce evidence and have a legal determination of the matter, the courts afterwards can inquire into it and enforce his right.

In Adams v. Roanoke, 102 Va. 53, 45 S. E. 881, the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was held to apply to local assessments for street improvements, and that, to be constitutional, a statute authorizing the imposition of such an assessment must provide for giving the assessed landowner reasonable notice and opportunity to appear and contest the legality, justice, and correctness of the charge before it is made final, as otherwise it deprives the landowner of his property without due process of law.

But in Ohio it has been held that when land is appropriated for widening a village street, an assessment by the front foot of the property abutting on the street, to pay the cost of the improvement, without the passage, notice, and publication of a preliminary resolution by the village council declaring the necessity for appropriating the property taken for that purpose, does not amount to a taking of property without due process of law, in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Caldwell v. Carthage, 49 Ohio St. 334, 31 N. E. 602.

Again, the supreme court of Texas, in Hutcheson v. Storrie, 92 Tex. 685, 45 L.R.A. 289, 71 Am. St. Rep. 884, 51 S. W. 848, held unconstitutional a statute of that state authorizing an assessment for the cost of a public improvement upon abutting property in proportion to its frontage, without regard to special benefits, and expressed the opinion that a charge greatly in excess of such benefits amounted to taking property without due process of law, for public use, without just compensation.

An assessment under the authority of a statute for laying a water main, imposed upon land along the line of the work and within municipal limits, according to the lineal foot frontage, and laid upon both rural and urban lots alike, was sustained in the case of State v. Robert P. Lewis Co. (Ramsey County v. Robert P. Lewis Co.) 72 Minn. 87, 42 L.R.A. 639, 75 N. W. 108, and sustained too in respect of land denied the use of the water flowing through the conduit. This decision was, on a second appeal, in 82 Minn. 390, 53 L.R.A. 421, 85 N. W. 207, 86 N. W. 611, reversed in deference to the authority of Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187, upon the theory that an arbitrary assessment where no benefits accrued was in contravention of the Federal Constitution, but after the decision in French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625, the court, upon a rehearing, reaffirmed its original decision.

In weighing the decisions in Minnesota one should keep in mind the provision of the Constitution of that state (art. 9, § 1) empowering the legislature, by general or special law, to authorize municipal corporations to levy assessments for local improvements upon property fronting upon such improvements, or upon the property to be benefited by such improvements, without regard to a cash valuation, and in such manner as the legislature may prescribe. Vide, Cook v. Slocum, 27 Minn. 509, 8 N. W. 755.

V. Municipal power.

a. Constitutional.

It does not seem, said the court in Cham- berlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551 (a case decided in 1878), to have been considered necessary in any of the decided cases to look very carefully into the constitutional limits imposed on the exercise of the power of municipal corporations to impose assessments for street improvements, and hence the limitations have not been fully ascertained and announced in any of the decisions.
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In certain states the Constitutions contain provisions making it the duty of the legislature to provide for the organization of municipal corporations, and to restrict their powers of taxation and assessment, and to borrow money, contract debts, or to loan their credit, so as to prevent abuses. A provision of this kind is held not to limit the power of the legislature by appropriate legislation, either directly or through municipal bodies, to impose assessments to defray the cost of local improvements upon property benefited thereby. according to its frontage. Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L.R.A. 330, 14 S. E. 521; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 149 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069; Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289; Ernst v. Kunkle, 5 Ohio St. 520; Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333.

A constitutional provision requiring the rule of taxation to be uniform is not limited or impaired by a further constitutional provision requiring the legislature, in establishing municipal corporations, to restrict their powers of taxation so as to prevent abuses; but the two are to be read together, and the latter as furnishing an additional protection to the taxpayer. Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242.

Notwithstanding constitutional provisions requiring the rule of taxation to be uniform, and requiring the legislature in establishing municipal corporations to restrict their powers of taxation so as to prevent abuses, and notwithstanding, also, that such provisions apply to and restrain the levying of special assessments to defray the cost of local improvements, an additional provision of the Constitution, making it the duty of the legislature and empowering it to provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages, and differentiating assessments from taxation, confers power upon the legislature to establish a system of local assessments to cover the cost of local improvements in municipalities. Ibid.

The Constitution of Missouri contains a provision (art. 10, § 11) that the annual rate of taxation in cities and towns of 30,000 inhabitants and upwards, for city or town purposes, shall not in the aggregate exceed 100 cents on the $100 valuation, and that such restriction as to rate shall apply to taxes of every kind and description, whether general or special, except taxes to pay valid existing indebtedness or bonds issued in renewal of such indebtedness. That provision is held to apply only to general taxes levied for governmental purposes, and not to special assessments for paying the cost of local improvements. Farrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 379; Meier v. St. Louis, 180 Mo. 391, 79 S. W. 955; Heman Constr. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 206 Mo. 172, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 104 S. W. 67, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 630.

In Minnesota, by a constitutional provision (art. 9, § 1, as amended in 1869), the legislature was empowered to authorize, by general or special laws, municipal corporations to levy assessments for local improvements upon property fronting upon such improvements, or upon the property to be benefited by them, without regard to a cash valuation and in such a manner as the legislature might prescribe. Vide. Cook v. Slocum, 27 Minn. 509, 8 N. W. 755.

By adopting this provision, the people, it is said, did not intend to reject or modify, in respect of taxes of the class of special assessments for local improvements, the just and reasonable principle that they shall be as nearly equal as may be, but, whatever the basis of apportionment that might be adopted, that it must include the idea of equality. Noonan v. Stillwater, 33 Minn. 198, 53 Am. Rep. 23, 22 N. W. 444; State v. Pillsbury, 82 Minn. 359, 85 N. W. 175. In the latter of these two cases, the court, speaking of the former one, said: "The gist of this decision is that while the amendment empowered the legislature to apportion and assess according to street frontage, it does not authorize an assessment on that plan, wholly disregarding the fundamental rule upon which special assessments are made, namely, that of benefits."

It was urged in State v. Robert P. Lewis Co. (Ramsey County v. Robert P. Lewis Co.) 72 Minn. 87, 42 L.R.A. 639, 75 N. W. 108, s. c. subsequent appeal, 82 Minn. 390, 53 L.R.A. 421, 85 N. W. 207, 86 N. W. 611, that an assessment for laying a water main in a city street, under the authority of a statute directing that method, of a stated sum the lineal foot, was unconstitutional and void under article 9, § 1 of the Minnesota Constitution, because the statute applied a uniform rate of taxation to densely populated city lots and the farm lands alike, and therefore necessarily resulted in inequality. It was not contended that the statute violated the Constitution simply because it provided for a frontage assessment, but because the same rate of assessment was applied indiscriminately to the two classes of real property, without regard to the benefits derived; but, while the Minnesota Constitution did provide that all taxes should be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territory or limits of the authority levying the tax, it also provided that a frontage tax or assessment might be made on all lands fronting upon water mains or pipes laid by cities or other municipalities, without regard to the cash value of such lands, and the court held that the statute in question was authorized by this provision of the Constitution. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

This case was followed and approved in State v. Macalester College, 87 Minn. 165, 91 N. W. 484.

A statute creating a separate water department of a municipal board of public works, to manage the water works of the city, and empowering it to assess the cost of laying distributing conduits 6 or more inches in diameter upon the benefited lots on the line, in the ratio that the narrowest front of each lot assessed bears to the entire frontage of land on both sides of the same street, undertakes to authorize taxation for local purposes without the consent of the voters or their chosen representatives, and therefore is illegal and void. Blades v. Water Comrs. 122 Mich. 366, 81 N. W. 258.

The principle of this decision was again applied in Cook Farm Co. v. Detroit, 124 Mich. 426, 83 N. W. 130, holding unconstitutional a statute attempting to confer upon a previously appointed municipal water board power theretofore not possessed by it, to assess upon abutting property the cost of laying street water mains. "While it was doubtless competent," said the court, "for the legislature to prescribe the board through which action might be taken to lay water mains, if it could confide the matter to such a board to be thereafter appointed, to the exclusion of the common council,—a question which we are not called upon to decide,—it could not confer such power upon a board consisting of members previously appointed at a time when its powers were less, and who were not selected with a view to the exercise of such powers."

b. Statutory.

There is a wide difference, according to the court in Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521, between an assessment laid by a legislative body having full authority over the subject and one imposed by a municipal corporation acting under a limited and delegated authority.

The question of apportionment of a special assessment for the cost of a local improvement among the owners of the property assessed, when the authority to apportion has been delegated by the legislature to a subordinate officer or body, is quite a different one from what it is when the legislature has itself prescribed how the apportionment shall be made. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2.

Every municipal corporation derives all its power from the state, and none can legislate beyond what the state has either expressly or impliedly authorized. Montgomery v. Foster, 133 Ala. 587, 32 So. 610.

The power of a municipal corporation to make an assessment for street pavement has no existence unless distinctly conferred by legislative authority. Blanchard v. Barre, 77 Vt. 420, 60 Atl. 970.

The principle that municipal corporations derive all their powers from the state, and cannot transcend them by legislation, is applied strictly to ordinances providing for the assessment of taxes on property for local improvements. Montgomery v. Foster, supra.

No citation of authorities, said the court in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 300, 51 L.R.A. 763, 83 N. W. 1074, is needed in support of the fundamental principle that the right of a municipal corporation to levy special assessments depends upon statutory enactment, and has no existence unless there is a valid statute conferring it.

Unless constitutionally restricted, municipalities have the right, when duly authorized, to assess the expense of a public improvement against the property specially benefited by it. Denver v. Kennedy, 33 Colo. 80, 80 Pac. 122, 467.

A municipality may be authorized by statute to create a local taxing district for local improvement purposes, embracing a part only of the property within its bounds. Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L.R.A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484, 57 N. E. 114; Martin v. Wills, 157 Ind. 153, 60 N. E. 1021.

It is entirely proper and competent for the legislature to empower the common council of a city to define the taxing district to be assessed to pay for a local street improvement. Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39, 2 Am. Rep. 76.

It is proper and competent for the legislature to empower the common council of a city to determine what property is specially benefited by a local street improvement. Ibid.

The right of municipal corporations under the Ohio Constitution of 1851, when empowered by their respective charters to impose special or local assessments upon property in the immediate vicinity of a public improvement, as distinguished from the power of general taxation, declared the court in Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159, is no longer to be regarded as an open question in Ohio.

The legislature may commit to local authorities the power to determine what property will be benefited by a local improvement so as to be charged with its cost. Garvin v. Daussman, 114 Ind. 429, 5 Am. St. Rep. 637, 16 N. E. 826.

There is no longer any question, said the court in Independence v. Gates, 110 Mo. 374, 19 S. W. 728, that cities may, by virtue of legislative grants, improve streets and make assessments on the abutting lands to pay for the same.

While the legislature may grant to a municipal corporation power to levy assessments for street improvements, the statute making the grant must be strictly construed, and the municipality must keep closely within its limit. Violett v. Alexandria, 92 Va. 561, 31 L.R.A. 382, 53 Am. St. Rep. 825, 23 S. E. 909.

A municipal corporation empowered by statute to make local improvements and defray the cost thereof, in whole or in part, either from the general corporate funds or by assessments upon property benefited, must, if it elects to assess the property benefited for all or any part of the cost of any particular improvement, proceed strictly in accordance with the statute. Helm v. Witz, 35 Ind. App. 131, 73 N. E. 846.

A city, in making local improvements, proceeds under special powers, and outside of such powers can lawfully do nothing, and although it is not necessary that such a rigid observance of the requirements of the statute as would tend to defeat the object to be accomplished be followed, nevertheless a substantial compliance with statutory requirements is exacted. State, Cronin, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 38 N. J. L. 410.

The rule applying to general taxation, that no power can be exercised by a municipality which has not been clearly granted, and that grants of power must be strictly pursued, applies with equal force to all species of special taxation for local improvements. Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L.R.A. 563, 33 N. E. 888.

The power of a municipality to assess property to defray the cost of a local improvement rests wholly in the authorizing statute, and any action beyond the terms of such statute is ultra vires and renders the assessment invalid. Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L.R.A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484, 57 N. E. 114; Martin v. Wills, 157 Ind. 153, 60 N. E. 1021; Klein v. Nugent Gravel Co. 162 Ind. 509, 70 N. E. 801.

An ordinance for a street improvement which is beyond the power of the municipality under the statute by virtue of which it assumes to act is void. People ex rel. Raymond v. Field, 197 Ill. 568, 64 N. E. 544.

A municipal ordinance levying a special tax for a local improvement is equally invalid whether the power to pass it is lacking, or exists and is abused. Palmer v. Danville, 154 Ill. 156, 38 N. E. 1067.

The power of a municipal corporation to improve a street and assess the cost thereof upon the abutting property does not depend upon the benefits to be derived by the property owners from the improvement. Morrison v. Hershire, 32 Iowa, 271.

VI. The principles governing the interposition of the courts.

The cases in which courts will entertain the complaint of a landowner and afford him substantial relief against a local assessment are few in number and lie within narrow bounds.

It is the general rule everywhere conceded, said the court in Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L.R.A. 330, 14 S. E. 521, that the discretion of the legislature in levying taxes, when exercised within constitutional limits, is conclusive.

It is for the legislature, and not the judiciary, to determine whether the expense of a public improvement shall be borne by the whole community, or by the district or neighborhood immediately benefited. Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966.

The question of the necessity and reasonableness of a local improvement is for the determination of the legislature, not the courts. Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L.R.A. 402, 11 S. E. 802.

If the legislature declares the cost of a local improvement shall be collected by general levy, or be levied upon abutting lots according to values or to benefits received, or to frontage, the determination binds the courts absolutely and conclusively, provided there is no want of legislative authority. Sheley v. Detroit, 45 Mich. 431, 8 N. W. 52.

The power to determine whether or not property assessed to defray the cost of a local improvement is benefited by such improvement is legislative, not judicial. Speer v. Athens, supra; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, 153 Ill. 649, 39 N. E. 1077; Moody v. Spotorno, 112 La. 1008, 36 So. 836; Prior v. Buehler & C. Constr. Co. 170 Mo. 439, 71 S. W. 205; McMaken v. Hayes, 10 Ohio C. C. N. S. 38.

Whether assessed property is benefited or not is a question which addresses itself to the discretion of the municipal authorities. Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408.

It is the peculiar province of a city council, in passing ordinances for local improvements, to determine the necessity and character of the improvement and the manner of its construction. Chicago v. Wilson, 195 Ill. 19, 57 L.R.A. 127, 62 N. E. 843.

In general, the local authorities are the judges of whether property assessed for a local improvement is benefited as much as or more than the sum assessed upon it. Heman v. Allen, 156 Mo. 534, 57 S. W. 559, affirmed in 181 U. S. 402, 45 L. ed. 922, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645.

It is asserted with substantial unanimity by the courts of this country, as well as by text writers of learning, according to the court in King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2, that unless the nature of the case precludes it, power to determine the confines of a taxing district for any particular burden is purely one of legislative discretion, and that the question of benefits accruing by reason of improvements contemplated is regarded as one of fact, which the legislature is always presumed to have considered and settled by the enactment.

Under a special tax proceeding the city council has sole power to determine what proportion of the special tax levied to pay for the improvement shall be borne by the municipality; and its determination upon this question cannot be judicially reviewed. East St. Louis v. Illinois C. R. Co. 238 Ill. 296, 87 N. E. 407.

The determination of a city council or village board of trustees, that abutting property on the line of a street improvement, assessed by authority of statute in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

proportion to its frontage, has received special benefits equal to the assessments, is conclusive against all collateral attacks. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taber, 168 Ind. 419, 77 N. E. 740, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 808.

The confirmation of an assessment by a municipal board of the expense of a local improvement laid upon property alleged to be benefited according to its frontage, and the direction to enforce the collection thereof, by a subsequent act of the legislature, preclude any judicial inquiry into its original validity. Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 687, 24 L. ed. 1098.

The determination of city authorities, that a street improvement is necessary and required for the convenience, comfort, and welfare of the city and its inhabitants, is conclusive, and not the subject of judicial review. Burlington v. Quick, 47 Iowa, 222.

Where the power to assess for street improvements has been regularly exercised, the propriety of the special tax is not subject to review by the courts. Heman v. Allen, supra.

The adoption of an ordinance by a city council, under power granted by the city charter, for the improvement of a street, is conclusive of the propriety of the improvement. Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 78 Ky. 357.

The judgment of a city council as to the propriety of a street improvement is conclusive. Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115.

The authority invested with the power to levy special taxes upon particular property to pay for beneficial local improvements determines the occasion for the tax, and levies it upon property subject to the tax; and when that is regularly done according to the terms of the law conferring the power, the propriety of the tax in any particular instance is not a judicial question, and is not reviewable by the courts. Moberly v. Hogan, 131 Mo. 19, 32 S. W. 1014.

When a special assessment is laid upon property benefited, for the purpose of meeting the cost of a local improvement, and is imposed in conformity to a statute, the courts cannot review it. Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615.

When the legislature has determined that the cost, or a proportion of it, of a local improvement, shall be thrown upon a designated region, it must be assumed that its determination was reached on constitutional principles, unless the court can see that it was unreasonable. Smith v. Worcester, 182 Mass. 232, 59 L.R.A. 728, 65 N. E. 40.

As the legislature has the power to impose taxation by assessment made against landowners for local improvement, it cannot be judicially restricted in determining the mode of collecting the tax. Broadway Baptist Church v. McAtee, 8 Bush, 508, 8 Am. Rep. 480.

A court cannot in any given case say that a mode of apportioning an assessment adopted by the legislature was otherwise than proper and valid. Allen v. Galveston, 51 Tex. 302.

If the legislature adopts the front-foot rule as the method of apportioning the expense of a local improvement among the owners of adjacent property thereby benefited, it is not for the judiciary to say that another method would be more equitable and uniform in its results. Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367.

When the legislature itself has fixed the proportion and prescribed the standard by which the cost of a street improvement is to be apportioned and assessed upon the abutting property, according to its frontage upon the line of the improvement, the courts have no power to substitute another standard, based upon actual benefits received, or measured by the values or enhanced values of the assessed properties. Kelly v. Chadwick, 104 La. 719, 29 So. 295, affirmed in 187 U. S. 540, 47 L. ed. 293, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175.

If, in the judgment of the legislature, an apportionment of a local assessment according to frontage is just and equitable in a given case, and the legislature directs by statute that it be made, it is not open to the courts to annul an assessment made pursuant to such statute, in the absence of a constitutional limitation upon the legislative power. Hager v. Melton, 66 W. Va. 62, 66 S. E. 13.

If the commissioners to assess the cost of a sewer upon contiguous property determine, upon a fair consideration of all influencing circumstances, that the benefit of such sewer to each lot equals its cost in front of each parcel assessed, it is impossible for a court to say that the assessment was not fairly and impartially laid in proportion to benefits. Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359, 20 N. E. 86.

A mode of assessment adopted by the legislature in apportioning the cost of a street improvement must be assumed to have been adopted for the purpose of substantially apportioning the cost according to benefits received. Allen v. Galveston, supra.

The action of the legislature in apportioning the expense of a local improvement, by whatsoever rule it may adopt, is of itself a determination that the property subjected to the assessment in the assessed district is benefited by the improvement to the extent of the burden imposed. Hadley v. Dague, 130 Cal. 207, 62 Pac. 500; Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 102, 65 Pac. 309; English v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 63, 37 Atl. 158; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taber, 168 Ind. 419, 77 N. E. 740, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 808; Kansas City v. Gibson, 66 Kan. 501, 72 Pac. 222; Smith v. Worcester, 182 Mass. 232, 59 L.R.A. 728, 65 N. E. 40.

In special taxation the imposition of the tax is of itself a determination that the benefits to the contiguous property will be as great as the burden imposed. Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L.R.A. 563, 33 N. E. 888; Lightner v. Peoria, 150 Ill. 80, 37 N. E. 69.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The imposition by municipal authorities of a special tax for a local improvement is of itself a determination that the property subjected to the tax is benefited by the improvement to the extent of the tax. Craw v. Tolono, 96 Ill. 255, 36 Am. Rep. 143; East St. Louis v. Illinois C. R. Co. 238 Ill. 296, 87 N. E. 407.

The action of a city council or village board of trustees in approving an assessment upon abutting property for a street improvement, apportioned according to frontage, is a determination that the assessed property received special benefit from the improvement equal to the amount of the assessment. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taber, supra.

If municipal assessors in levying upon abutting property, in proportion to its frontage, an assessment for the cost of a sidewalk, act under the authority of a statute, and are not limited by constitutional provisions in that behalf, they are presumed to have determined that the frontage fairly measures the probable benefit from the improvement, and their decision cannot be overthrown nor disputed. White v. People, 94 Ill. 604; Craw v. Tolono, supra.

The case of Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 638, 37 So. 291, was decided upon the theory that the legislature by express statute is competent to direct an assessment to be laid upon property along the line of a local improvement, according to the frontage, to defray the total cost of such improvement, without making any provision for ascertaining whether or not such cost exceeds the benefits conferred by its expenditure, because, it was said, such a statute is in effect a legislative determination that the cost of the improvement does not exceed the amount of special benefit conferred by the improvement upon the assessed property, and such determination is conclusive, and not open to judicial review.

In every case in which there is room for any substantial difference of opinion, the decision of the legislature that the property in a particular district will be benefited by a local improvement in proportion to its frontage, area, or value is conclusive upon the courts. English v. Wilmington and Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taber, supra; Coates v. Nugent, 76 Kan. 556, 92 Pac. 597; Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 78 Ky. 357; Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115; Smith v. Worcester, 182 Mass. 232, 59 L.R.A. 728, 65 N. E. 40.

An act of the Congress of the United States, enacting that assessments thereafter levied in the District of Columbia for laying water mains should be levied at the rate of $1.25 the linear front foot, against all lots or land abutting upon the street, road, or alley in which a water main shall be laid, is conclusive as to the benefits to the abutting property. Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521.

Unless it is made to appear upon the face of the proceedings, or in some competent way, that in the assessment upon abutting property in proportion to its frontage of the cost of a street improvement pursuant to a statute directing that method of apportionment,—which is in legal effect a legislative decision that the benefits resulting from the improvement are proportioned to the frontage of the assessed property upon the line of the work,—there has been a gross and substantial variation from the principle of compensatory benefits, it is the duty of the courts to respect the legislative judgment and uphold the assessment. Hadley v. Dague, 130 Cal. 207; 62 Pac. 500; Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 102, 65 Pac. 309.

A statute authorizing the laying of an assessment for a local improvement is conclusive on the courts in respect of its benefits, unless in extraordinary cases in which manifestly the legislative authority has been abused. Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L.R.A. 402, 11 S. E. 802.

The judgment of municipal authorities upon the question whether assessed property is benefited or not by a street improvement is ordinarily, and save in the most extreme cases, conclusive. Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408.

The question of benefits is ordinarily one that must be addressed to the city council, in the levy of special taxes for local improvements; and the decision of that body, if not unreasonable, an arbitrary abuse of power, or a violation of the fundamental principles upon which the power of taxation rests, is final, and not open to judicial review. Palmer v. Danville, 154 Ill. 156, 38 N. E. 1067; Payne v. South Springfield, 161 Ill. 285, 44 N. E. 105; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Elmhurst, 165 Ill. 148, 46 N. E. 437.

A legislative affirmance or authorization of a front-foot rule of apportionment of assessments for street improvements adopted by municipal ordinance is conclusive upon the courts, unless the circumstances in a particular case show its application to be inequitable, unlawful, arbitrary, and unjust. Baltimore v. Stewart, 92 Md. 535, 48 Atl. 165.

Under a municipal charter providing that benefits should be assessed upon the owners or occupants of taxable property in proportion, as nearly as may be, to the advantage which the lot or parcel is deemed to derive from the improvement for which the assessment is made, the decision of what property is benefited and how much it is benefited is within the discretion of the municipal authorities, and if exercised in good faith, without fraud, mistake, or abuse, is not open to review in the courts. Powers v. Grand Rapids, 98 Mich. 398, 57 N. W. 250.

When, by statute, the cost of a local improvement is to be assessed by the municipal board of public works upon the real property especially benefited by the improvement, in proportion, as nearly as may be, to the benefits, and only to the extent of such benefits, the determination of that board of the facts as to what property is benefited, and the extent of the benefit it receives, is conclusive upon the courts, in the absence of fraud or of demonstrable mistake of fact. State ex rel. Cunningham v. District Ct. 29 Minn. 62, 11 N. W. 133; State ex rel. Powell v. District Ct. 47 Minn. 406, 50 N. W. 476.

We have repeatedly held, declared the court in State ex rel. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. v. District Ct. 68 Minn. 242, 71 N. W. 27, that under the charter of the city of St. Paul the judgment of the board of public works as to what property is benefited, and how much it is benefited by a street improvement, is final and conclusive, and cannot be reviewed by the courts, unless it is shown to be fraudulent in fact, or to have been made upon a demonstrable mistake of fact, or that in making it the board applied an illegal principle or an erroneous rule of law.

The legislative charter granted the city of St. Paul pursuant to a provision in the Minnesota state Constitution (art. 9, § 1) authorizing the enactment of general or special laws with reference to assessments for local improvements empowered the city to levy such assessments upon property fronting upon the improvements or benefited thereby, and required such property to be assessed, as nearly as might be, in proportion to the resulting benefits. Under such authority the judgment of the board of public works of said city as to what property is benefited, and how much it is benefited, and that it is benefited in proportion to its frontage upon the line of the work, is, when exercised in good faith, and not founded upon a mistake of fact or law, conclusive upon the courts. State ex rel. Wheeler v. District Ct. 80 Minn. 293, 83 N. W. 183.

When a municipal legislature adjudges that a particular parcel of property will be benefited by the construction of a sewer, and fixes the ratio of its benefits when it establishes the sewer assessment district, in the absence of any charge of fraud or oppression such judgment is conclusive on the courts. Prior v. Buehler & C. Constr. Co. 170 Mo. 439, 71 S. W. 205.

A legislative determination by the city council, that property abutting upon the line of a street improvement will be benefited by such improvement in proportion to its frontage, and directing an assessment accordingly, where the city's power to adopt such a method of apportionment is unrestrained by statute, is final, and not the subject of review by the courts, save in occasional and exceptional cases involving fraudulent or arbitrary action. Northern P. R. Co. v. Seattle, 46 Wash. 674, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 121, 123 Am. St. Rep. 955, 91 Pac. 244.

The determination of the local authorities as to what property will be benefited by the opening of a street, for the purpose of assessing the cost thereof, is final and conclusive; and the only question upon which a property owner has a right to be heard is whether the assessment laid upon his property is in its proper proportion to the whole assessment upon all the property benefited by the improvement. Dickson v. Racine, 61 Wis. 545, 21 N. W. 620; Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326, 51 N. W. 566.

A statement in the syllabus of Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551, that "where the city council determines that the amount of the assessment does not exceed the value of the benefits specially conferred, its judgment in the premises, in the absence of fraud, is final and conclusive, unless modified," was characterized as not called for by anything in the record, in a memorandum of Okey, J., concurring in the conclusion reached in the case, and therefore he withheld his assent to it.

If palpable injustice results from the application of a rule of apportionment prescribed by the legislature for an assessment upon property benefited by a local improvement, a court of equity may interfere. Union P. R. Co. v. Abilene, 78 Kan. 820, 98 Pac. 224.

While the power of the legislature to regulate assessments for local purposes must be respected, yet when in its exercise the attempt is made to take one man's property to improve the property of another, the interference of the courts becomes necessary. Covington v. Matson, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1323, 34 S. W. 897.

The court will not permit an assessment which amounts to spoliation to be enforced. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. v. Voris, 110 Ky. 315, 61 S. W. 474.

A local assessment may so transcend the limits of equality and reason that its exaction would cease to be a tax or a contribution, and become extortion and confiscation. In that case it would be the duty of the court to protect the citizen from robbery under color of a better name. Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174; Sands v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 571, 31 Am. Rep. 742.

When taxation is so excessive that it is doubtful whether the property to be benefited will suffice to pay the assessments against it, such assessments can no longer be deemed taxation, and the courts will afford protection against such an arbitrary exercise of power. Broadway Baptist Church v. McAtee, 8 Bush, 508, 8 Am. Rep. 480.

When it is plainly and palpably manifest from the physical condition of the property involved, its locality, environment, character of the work or improvement, assessment, and from the very nature of things, that an assessment is not adapted to the purpose, and is an exaction from the property owner of a contribution which he should not be obliged to make in that capacity, the courts will interfere to prevent a consummation of the injustice. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2.

Although the proper legislative authority, and not the courts, must be the judge of the propriety of a street improvement and the benefit to the abutting property assessed to pay its cost, nevertheless no department of the government can take the property of the citizen for public purposes without just compensation; and when the entire property is taken to pay for a public improvement, there is no room for a presumption as to benefits received, but a case of spoliation is established. Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115.

If a statute upon its face entirely disregards the relation of the benefits received to the special taxes assessed upon the respective estates, it is plainly unconstitutional; but as in many cases it is impossible to estimate the amount of benefits with absolute accuracy, and methods of determination must be adopted which are practicable and give a reasonable approximation to accuracy, the choice of methods is primarily for the legislature, which must be allowed much latitude in exercising its judgment and discretion; and it is only when the decision of the legislature is plainly one that will be likely to result in taxation either disproportional or unreasonable, that the courts can interfere. White v. Gove, 183 Mass. 333, 67 N. E. 359.

Municipal authorities, in the guise of a public improvement, will not be allowed arbitrarily to deprive any citizen of his estate. Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408, s. c. subsequent appeal, 101 Ga. 697, 29 S. E. 14.

The validity of a municipal ordinance levying special taxes to make local improvements, if unreasonable, an arbitrary abuse of power, or violative of the fundamental principles upon which the taxing power rests, is open to attack and determination in the courts. Palmer v. Danville, 154 Ill. 156, 38 N. E. 1067.

A municipal ordinance imposing a special tax for the construction of a sidewalk, proportioned according to frontage, cannot stand if it is unfair, oppressive, and unreasonable,—if, for example, an owner of a lot of small value is by such an ordinance burdened with the expense of filling or bridging a chasm, digging down a hill, or blasting a ledge of rock, in order that the walk may be made. Job v. Alton, 189 Ill. 256, 82 Am. St. Rep. 448, 59 N. E. 622.

While special assessments to meet the cost of local improvements, laid upon property benefited by them in accordance with the front-foot rule, are, as a general proposition, valid and constitutional, provided they do not result in gross inequality, nevertheless if in any particular case it is established by the proof that there is such a marked disproportion between the assessment as laid, and any possible benefit conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed, as clearly to show the principle of equality and uniformity to have been ignored and gross injustice to have been done, courts will interfere and afford appropriate relief to the landowner. Kinston v. Wooten, 150 N. C. 295, 63 S. E. 1061.

If a mode of assessment is regular and constitutional, and the power to levy it exists in the class of cases in which it is made, the courts are not authorized to interfere merely because they may consider the taxation impolitic, or even unjust and oppressive. Norfolk City v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. 224; Davis v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 861, 6 S. E. 230.

A court is never called upon to decide which is the most just and equitable form of taxation, but whether the one it has under consideration is in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the state. Norfolk City v. Ellis, supra.

An assessment for the cost of improving a street, laid upon abutting property according to the front-foot rule, and not measured by the value of benefits received by the assessed property, where such rule is sanctioned by the legislature, is not open to correction in the courts, except in such cases as amount to a virtual confiscation of the property. Wilzinski v. Greenville, 85 Miss. 393, 37 So. 807.

The power to impose special taxes against landowners to pay for local improvement must to some extent depend upon the fact that the persons taxed are correspondingly benefited by the expenditure of the tax; but courts hesitate to interfere in cases in which it may be doubtful as to whether the persons taxed receive commensurate benefits. Broadway Baptist Church v. McAtee, 8 Bush, 508, 8 Am. Rep. 480.

While the right of the court to interfere for the protection of an individual property owner in cases of special assessments for local improvements is recognized and acknowledged, its exercise can only be justifiable in rare and extreme cases, when it is manifest that palpable injustice has been done and the landowner's rights have clearly been violated. Kinston v. Wooten, 150 N. C. 295, 63 S. E. 1061.

The power of taxation implies the power of apportionment; and when the legislature has exercised the power and made an apportionment, a court cannot assume to adjudge it void, unless the invasion of private right is flagrant and its demonstration clear. Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174.

Unless it is patent and obvious that the burden imposed upon property by the front-foot rule of apportionment of an assessment for a local improvement is wholly disproportionate to the benefits conferred upon such property by the improvement, the courts will not interfere. Union P. R. Co. v. Abilene, 78 Kan. 820, 98 Pac. 224.

The rule is that it requires a clear and strong case to justify a court in nullifying a municipal ordinance for a local improvement and special taxation to pay for it, upon the ground that it is unfair, unjust, and unreasonable. Chicago v. Wilson, 195 Ill. 19, 57 L.R.A. 127, 62 N. E. 843.

Unless otherwise provided by statute, it must appear that the power and authority conferred upon a municipal council to determine the question of benefits has clearly been abused, to warrant judicial interference. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Elmhurst, 165 Ill. 148, 46 N. E. 437.

And ordinarily it must so appear upon the face of the proceeding. Ibid. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The legislature, or its duly authorized instrumentalities, are primarily the judges in respect of the imposition of local assessments upon property benefited to defray the cost of local improvements, and their decisions will not be disturbed by the courts, unless it is clearly established either that there is an absence of power, or that the particular method prescribed for the assessments of the peculiar benefits to the burdened property is so plainly inequitable as to offend the constitutional principle. Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L.R.A. 330, 14 S. E. 521; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 149 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069.

A case of spoliation is not made out by an assessment for a street improvement at a rate per front foot not over half the salable value of the property assessed, after the improvement has been made. Duker v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 135, 74 S. W. 744.

Where local and unequal assessments in the ratio of benefits received is warranted in the taxing power of the state by the absence of any constitutional restriction, an assessment upon abutting property for the cost of a public work in a city street, made upon the rule of like assessments for like buildings in the ratio of frontage on the street, without reference to the use or benefits from the work, is not so unreasonable and unjust that the courts are at liberty to declare it void. Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174.

The Federal courts cannot interfere to restrain the enforcement of an assessment upon abutting property for the cost of a local improvement, notwithstanding it is laid under the front-foot rule, and even without actual consideration of special benefits, where the state statutes have authorized the assessment, unless there has been such an abuse of power as to amount to a confiscation of property or a deprivation of personal rights. Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 48 L. ed. 195, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88.

Under a statute giving authority to county courts in certain counties to entertain a landowner's appeal from an assessment by the commissioners under certain drainage acts, the court has the power to set aside an assessment made under a rule of apportionment by the acre, instead of an apportionment according to benefits. People ex rel. Parker v. Jefferson County Ct. 55 N. Y. 604.

The court will not vacate an assessment for the cost of repairs to a street, laid upon the abutting property according to its lineal foot frontage, instead of against the lot owners, because of the possible error, in case of change of ownership, in shifting the burden from vendor to vendee. Covington v. Boyle, 6 Bush, 204.

Whether or not an assessment upon land abutting on a street to defray the cost of repaving such street, apportioned according to the number of feet frontage upon the line of the work, is unconstitutional, an action in equity to vacate it as a cloud upon the title will not lie, because, if unconstitutional, the invalidity of the assessment is apparent upon the face of the record, and constitutes no cloud; and if constitutional it is, of course, valid, and therefore not a cloud. Conde v. Schenectady, 164 N. Y. 258, 58 N. E. 130.

Although a municipal charter requires an assessment for a local improvement to be made according to special benefits to the assessed property upon the line of the work, and according to frontage, and it is essential to the validity of such assessment that the requirements of the statute be complied with, nevertheless if, upon the face of the proceedings, it appears that the statute has been disregarded, so that the assessment is void, an action in equity to enjoin the collection of and to remove the assessment as void upon its face cannot be maintained in the absence of an allegation of fraud, because, the assessment being void upon its face, the property owner has an adequate remedy at law. Blanchard v. Barre, 77 Vt. 420, 60 Atl. 970.

VII. The necessity for an apportionment.

The power of taxing and the power of apportioning taxation are identical and inseparable, and taxes cannot be laid without apportionment. M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 428, 4 L. ed. 606.

The statement applies to special assessments for local improvements, and, according to the court in Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345, the "doctrine is sustained by a uniform line of decisions in our own and our sister states."

An apportionment of the burden of an assessment for a local improvement is essential. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2, affirmed in 184 U. S. 61, 46 L. ed. 431, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290.

Every valid assessment to pay for a public improvement must rest upon a legally ordained basis of apportionment. Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503, 37 N. W. 11.

All that is required in assessing property for the cost of a local improvement is that the charges shall be apportioned in some just and reasonable mode, according to the benefits received. Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663.

I admit, said Agnew, J., in Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255, in the course of the opinion of the court nullifying an assessment upon rural lands, laid according to frontage, for the cost of opening and improving a rural highway, that the power to tax is unbounded by any express limit in the Constitution, that it may be exercised to the full extent of the public exigency. I concede that it differs from the power of eminent domain, and has no thought of compensation by way of a return for that which it takes and applies to the public good, further than that all derive benefit from the purpose to which it is 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

applied. But, nevertheless, taxation is bounded in its exercise by its own nature, essential characteristics, and purpose. It must therefore visit all alike, in a reasonably practicable way, of which the legislature may judge, but within the just limits of what is taxation. Like the rain, it may fall upon the people in districts and by turns, but still it must be public in its purpose, and reasonably just and equal in its distribution, and cannot sacrifice individual right by a palpably unjust exaction. To do so is confiscation, not taxation; extortion, not assessment; and falls within the clearly implied restriction in the Bill of Rights.

The benefits a property owner receives from the improvement can be ascertained only by a reasonable mode of assessment. Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. 360, 22 Am. Rep. 760.

If municipal authorities, in assessing property for the cost of a local improvement, act upon an illegal principle of assessment,—for example, on the assumption that they might assess all lots benefited at a uniform rate, without regard to the difference in benefits conferred,—although there might be no mistake of facts, and the action be in good faith, yet the assessment would be invalid. State ex rel. Powell v. District Ct. 47 Minn. 406, 50 N. W. 476.

When property is assessed by the front-foot rule for the cost of a local improvement, equity requires that the amount of the whole work be ascertained, and each lot be charged in the proportion that its frontage bears to all the property assessed. Wilkes-Barre v. McDermott, 6 Kulp, 345.

An assessment upon abutting property for the cost of grading the part of the street in front of such property is not in accordance with any recognized principle of taxation for local improvements, but is a tax upon specific lands, without any reference to benefits conferred upon such land; and as a mode of assessment it is purely arbitrary and void. State, Cronin, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 38 N. J. L. 410.

An assessment for a street improvement, upon abutting property, charging each lot with the expense of the work directly in front of it, is void. New Whatcom v. Bellingham Bay Improv. Co. 9 Wash. 639, 38 Pac. 163.

A levy of special taxes by a municipality for the cost of constructing or reconstructing a sewer, according to the front-foot rule, is invalid without a finding that the benefits conferred by the work are equal and uniform upon all the lots assessed, under the provisions of the Compiled Statutes of 1893 of Nebraska, chap. 12a, § 78. John v. Connell, 64 Neb. 233, 89 N. W. 806.

The streets in a town or city are common highways which all the citizens have a right to use, and which it is their common duty, as a local public, to render useful and to preserve; and the legislature cannot impose upon any one citizen the whole burden of constructing a public road; neither can any municipality exact the cost of opening or repairing a street from a particular citizen. In either case, each and every one must contribute his proper share. Sutton v. Louisville, 5 Dana, 28; Lexington v. McQuillan, 9 Dana, 513, 35 Am. Dec. 159.

It is not sufficient, to render an assessment valid, that the legislative act under which it is made shall merely declare that the cost, or a part of the cost, of the improvement shall be assessed upon the property burdened. It must go further, and establish some rule, some definite scheme within constitutional limits, for the apportionment of the tax upon the lands on which it is assessed. State, Speer, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 38 N. J. L. 168.

An assessment made upon a mere arithmetical calculation of the proportion of the sum paid to a contractor for filling in a street, without regard to whether he has done his work in whole, or in part, or not at all, and laid down each parcel of property assessed according to its size, without any consideration of benefits received by it from the work, or its situation and state with reference to the work, is invalid. State, Mann, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. L. 662.

The court, in State, Zabriskie, Prosecutor, v. Hudson City, 29 N. J. L. 115, referring to and vacating an assessment for a street improvement according to the frontage of the property on the line of the work, under a municipal charter requiring such assessments to be assessed upon the lands benefited in proportion to the benefits received, said: The principle on which the commissioners made their estimate is not contemplated by the charter. To make a mere calculation on such a basis would not require the services of three judicious disinterested persons, sworn faithfully, honestly, and impartially to perform their duties. Any clerk or schoolboy, with a little knowledge of arithmetic, could do that.

It was the duty of the commissioners, said the court in vacating an assessment for a street improvement, in the case of State, Water Comrs. Prosecutors, v. Hudson, 27 N. J. L. 214, in the first place, to ascertain all the lands benefited. They were, in the next place, to ascertain how much each lot was benefited by this expenditure, and to adjudicate the amount each was to pay, in proportion to the benefit. These were of the essence of their duties. They required great care and discrimination to do them justly. It not only does not appear, from their report, that they did this, but it appears affirmatively that, instead thereof, they merely applied the Procrustean rule, of dividing the aggregate expense by the number of lots fronting on the avenue, and placing it equally on all. For this purpose there was no necessity of the gravity of a commission. The clerk of the council could have done it without leaving his office. It was only one sum in simple addition, and another in long division. These remarks of the court were referred to with approval in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

State, Malone, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 28 N. J. L. 500.

VIII. The legislative discretion to prescribe rules of apportionment.

The power to tax is a power to apportion the tax as the legislature may see fit, without limit, unless one is imposed by the Constitution. M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 428, 4 L. ed. 606; People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345.

When the legislature has contemplated a certain region, and may be supposed to have acted in view of a specific scheme of local improvement, it may, within reasonable limits, determine that the cost of the improvement shall fall upon a designated district, and may fix the principles upon which the cost shall be apportioned. Smith v. Worcester, 182 Mass. 232, 59 L.R.A. 728, 65 N. E. 40.

The rule of apportionment of the cost of a local improvement among the parcels of land benefited thereby rests in the discretion of the legislature. The discretion of that body in this behalf is commensurate with the broad domain of legislative power. It may lawfully prescribe any method of apportionment, when not constitutionally restricted, which it chooses and deems just and equitable. Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966; King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2; Kansas City v. Gibson, 66 Kan. 501, 72 Pac. 222; Union P. R. Co. v. Abilene, 78 Kan. 820, 98 Pac. 224; Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 274; Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155, 24 Am. Rep. 535; Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615.

In the exercise of the power of assessment by municipal corporations, the legislative discretion in apportioning the burden according to benefits is unfettered and broad. Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333.

The authorities establish the proposition, said the court in Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367, that a special assessment to defray the cost of a local improvement may be made by the legislature on the basis of benefits, and that the legislature is not restricted to any one mode of apportionment.

The power of the legislature to impose the entire cost of the construction of a sewer upon such principle or rule of apportionment as it shall prescribe cannot be doubted. Unless restricted in the choice of methods, it may adopt any rule or principle of apportionment, in imposing the cost or a part of the cost of an improvement in a municipality, whether regulating, grading, or paving a street, or constructing a sewer, that it determines to be just and equitable. People ex rel. Scott v. Pitt, 169 N. Y. 521, 58 L.R.A. 372, 62 N. E. 662, affirming 64 App. Div. 316, 72 N. Y. Supp. 191.

Any mode of assessment upon abutting property for the cost of a street improvement, which the legislature may provide, whether the front-foot rule or another, may lawfully be resorted to in apportioning the charge, provided the assessment does not exceed the amount of special benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed. Indianapolis v. Holt, 155 Ind. 222, 57 N. E. 966, 988, 1100.

The mode in which provision is made for necessary repairs to streets, provided only it operates equally and uniformly, is in the discretion of the legislature. Hart v. Gaven, 12 Cal. 476.

It is entirely competent for the legislature to authorize municipal corporations to assess the whole or any portion of the expense of local street improvements upon the property deemed to be particularly and especially benefited thereby, in proportion to the benefits received, if in the judgment of the legislature that rule of apportionment is most just and equitable. Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39, 2 Am. Rep. 76.

A statute authorizing a municipal corporation to grade and improve the city streets, and to assess the expense of doing so among the owners and occupants of the land benefited by the improvement, in proportion to the amount of benefits conferred, is constitutional. People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289.

No constitutional limitation in the state of Missouri prohibits the use of the area rule of apportionment of the cost of district sewers, as provided by a charter granted by the legislature to the city of St. Joseph. St. Joseph use of Gibson v. Farrell, 106 Mo. 437, 17 S. W. 497.

And acts of the legislature authorizing the apportionment of assessments for local improvements according to the frontage of abutting property are equally constitutional and valid, if not expressly prohibited in the organic law. Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 638, 37 So. 291; St. Joseph v. Anthony, 30 Mo. 537; St. Joseph v. O'Donoghue, 31 Mo. 345; Powell v. St. Joseph, 31 Mo. 347; Magee v. Com. 46 Pa. 358; Wray v. Pittsburgh, 46 Pa. 365.

An act of the legislature authorizing the imposition of assessments upon property along the line of a local improvement, to pay the cost of such improvement, violates no provision of the Constitution by prescribing a different method for laying such assessments than one based upon special benefits conferred. Kansas City v. Gibson, 66 Kan. 501, 72 Pac. 222.

A provision in a municipal charter enacted by the legislature, directing and authorizing the assessment and levy by a board of sewer commissioners, by direct tax or assessment on the property located or fronting on the street through which any sewer may be laid or built, of a definite and precise sum per linear foot, is constitutional and valid, inasmuch as the legislature has an unrestricted choice of methods in apportioning the cost of a local improvement, and unlimited power to impose the entire or any part of the cost thereof upon abutting property. People ex rel. Scott v. Pitt, 169 N. Y. 521, 58 L.R.A. 372, 62 N. E. 662, affirming 64 App. Div. 316, 72 N. Y. Supp. 191.

In the absence of any constitutional provision forbidding it to do so, the power and discretion of the legislature to impose, or authorize the imposition of, special assessments upon adjacent property to defray the cost of local improvements, according to the front-foot rule, is unrestrained. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345; Emery v. Bradford, 29 Cal. 75; Walsh v. Mathews, 29 Cal. 123; Hadley v. Dague, 130 Cal. 207, 62 Pac. 500; Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 102, 65 Pac. 309; Union P. R. Co. v. Abilene, 78 Kan. 820, 98 Pac. 224; Rutherford v. Hamilton, 97 Mo. 543, 11 S. W. 249; Langstroth v. Philadelphia, 1 W. N. C. 166; Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N. W. 242; Roberts v. First Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 504, 79 N. W. 1049; Tripp v. Tankton, 10 S. D. 516, 74 N. W. 447.

The legislature by statute may authorize municipal corporations to assess the cost of street improvements against abutting lands and lots by the running foot, without regard to benefits or the area of the assessed property; and assessments laid pursuant thereto will be valid. Kirkland v. Board of Public Works, 142 Ind. 123, 41 N. E. 374.

A rule of apportionment according to frontage, even if it does work inequality, does not invalidate an assessment, if the legislature has authorized or commanded it to be employed. State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227.

When the power of the legislature to levy special assessments for local improvements in municipalities is not limited by the Constitution, it is competent not only for the legislature to impose such assessments upon adjoining property, but also to apportion the assessment by the foot frontage of the assessed property, or in any other manner that the legislature may see fit to adopt. Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Watertown, 1 S. D. 46, 44 N. W. 1072.

The legislature has discretionary power to prescribe the mode of apportioning an assessment for a local improvement, either according to valuation or to frontage. State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, supra; Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124; Motz v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

The legislature has the power to direct an assessment to be made for the cost of a local improvement upon the property charged, either pro rata according to the foot frontage, or in proportion to the benefit received. Re Klock, 30 App. Div. 24, 51 N. Y. Supp. 897.

There is no constitutional restraint upon the legislature, which prevents its authorizing a municipality to levy local assessments for the cost of sewers and street improvements according to either the front-foot rule or the area rule of apportionment. St. Joseph use of Gibson v. Farrell, 106 Mo. 437, 17 S. W. 497.

If there are no constitutional restrictions in the way,—and in Montana there are none,—and nothing in the nature and circumstances of the particular case to make an assessment of the cost of a local improvement upon the property benefited in proportion to its superficial area work manifest injustice, it may be regarded as settled as within the competency of the legislature to provide that the assessment be made by such method. McMillan v. Butte, 30 Mont. 220, 76 Pac. 203.

A state legislature, if untrammelled by any constitutional limitation, may, at will and in its discretion, direct assessments for the cost of local improvements to be laid in proportion to the frontage, the area, or the market value of the assessed property. Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966; Webster v. Fargo, 181 U. S. 394, 45 L. ed. 912, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 623; Seattle v. Kelleher, 195 U. S. 351, 49 L. ed. 232, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; Voris v. Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. 163 Ind. 599, 70 N. E. 249; Meier v. St. Louis, 180 Mo. 391, 79 S. W. 955; Heman Constr. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 206 Mo. 172, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 104 S. W. 67, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 630.

The legislature, in authorizing a public improvement and an assessment upon neighboring property to pay for it, is not limited to any particular method in making the assessment, but, at its election, may adopt as the measure the front-foot, the square foot, the acreage, or the ad valorem rule of assessment. Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 525; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367.

The legislature may constitutionally fix upon a basis of apportionment of local assessments for local improvements according to some definite standard applied through a measurement of length, quantity, or value to the assessed property. English v. Wilmington, Qellarv. (Del.) 63, 37 Atl. 158.

In the opinion of the court in Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 687, 24 L. ed. 1098, it is no longer an open question but that the legislative power may direct special assessments for local road and street improvements to be made in proportion to the frontage, area, or market value of the adjoining property, at its discretion.

It is conceded on all sides, said the court in Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1, to be the province of the legislature to prescribe how an apportionment of a special assessment for street paving shall be made, and it may adopt either the front-foot rule, or the area of the fronting lots, or their value, inclusive or exclusive of the buildings upon them, as the rule or standard, at its election. Occasional hardships may result from the adoption of any one of these modes, but the authorities are united in the conclusion that any of them may lawfully be made the basis of the apportionment.

There is no constitutional limitation upon the power of the legislature to provide for the working, opening, repairing, and improving of public highways, streets, and roads, and for the meeting of the expense of doing so: all this rests in the sound discretion of that body, and the maxim, Salus populi suprema lex, applies. Hayden v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 817.

While the taxing power is limited or circumscribed by a constitutional rule requiring uniform and ad valorem taxation; and the power of eminent domain by the prohibition of taking private property for public use without making just compensation,—the power to have worked, opened, repaired, and improved the public highways, streets, and roads, according to the court in Hayden v. Atlanta, supra, may be exercised by the legislature in such manner and way and in such circumstances as it may deem best.

Although a charge upon property, of the cost of a local improvement, may exceed the benefit conferred by such improvement upon the assessed property, nevertheless, if it is made under the authority and direction of the legislature, in the exercise of an undoubted legislative power, it cannot be invalidated by proof that the charge was unequal, unjust, or even arbitrary. Genet v. Brooklyn, 99 N. Y. 296, 1 N. E. 777.

IX. The binding quality of statutory rules of apportionment.

a. In general.

Authority to levy an assessment for the cost of a local improvement is purely statutory, and no assessment other than that which the statute authorizes can be made. Niklaus v. Conkling, 118 Ind. 289, 20 N. E. 797; Frankfort v. State, 128 Ind. 438, 27 N. E. 1115.

The power to levy assessments to pay for local improvements exists only where it is distinctly conferred by legislative authority. Stebbins v. Kay, 123 N. Y. 31, 25 N. E. 207, reversing 51 Hun, 589, 4 N. Y. Supp. 566.

In order to make an assessment a lien upon the property assessed, the statute authorizing the imposition of such assessment must be strictly pursued. Fitzgerald v. Sioux City, 125 Iowa, 396, 101 N. W. 268.

The legislature, in authorizing municipalities to levy assessments for the cost of public or local improvements upon the property in a particular district, may prescribe a rule of apportionment, either according to special benefits conferred upon the assessed property by the improvement, or proportionally to its lineal frontage upon the line of the improvement, at its election; and in either case an assessment by any other method than the one prescribed in the governing statute will be invalid. Crawfordsville Music Hall Asso. v. Clements, 12 Ind. App. 464, 39 N. E. 540, 40 N. E. 752; Coburn v. Bossert, 13 Ind. App. 359, 40 N. E. 281.

Whenever the legislature by statute prescribes the rule or method of apportioning a special assessment for a local improvement, that rule or method, and none other, must be adopted and followed, or else the assessment will not be valid. Joyes v. Shadburn, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 892, 13 S. W. 361; Marshall v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co.

(Ky.) 66 S. W. 182; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Watt, 51 La. Ann. 1345, 26 So. 70; Moody v. Chadwick, 52 La. Ann. 1888, 28 So. 361; State ex rel. Cunningham v. District Ct. 29 Minn. 62, 11 N. W. 133; Fowler v. St. Joseph, 37 Mo. 228; Stebbins v. Kay, supra; Re Klock, 30 App. Div. 24, 51 N. Y. Supp. 897; Re Wheeler, 39 Misc. 484, 80 N. Y. Supp. 204; Jones v. Holzapfel, 11 Okla. 405, 68 Pac. 511; Blanchard v. Barre, 77 Vt. 420, 60 Atl. 970.

An assessment made by a municipal corporation under an arbitrary rule is void, when the statute which authorizes the assessment to be made at all lays down another and different rule of making it. State ex rel. Shannon v. District Ct. Judges, 51 Minn. 539, 53 N. W. 800, 55 N. W. 122.

When commissioners of assessment adopt a principle of apportionment not sanctioned by the law defining their duties,—as, for example, the front-foot rule, when they are required to assess the real estate on principles of equity and according to the damage or the benefit to the owners of the assessed property,—the assessment is void. State, Culver, Prosecutor, v. Bergen, 29 N. J. L. 266; State, Vanhorn, Prosecutrix, v. Bergen, 30 N. J. L. 307.

When assessors adopt erroneous rules as the basis of making an assessment upon property benefited by such a local improvement as the construction of a sewer, and in so doing violate the spirit and intent of statutory provisions requiring, as near as may be, a just and equitable assessment in proportion to the advantages which the owner assessed may be deemed to derive from the work, the courts will set the assessment aside. Clark v. Dunkirk, 12 Hun, 181.

When the legislature limits a municipal corporation, in assessing by the front-foot rule the cost and expense of widening and extending a street, to imposing the burden upon property immediately abutting on the part improved, it has no power, by declaring other property specially benefited, even if it really is, to assess such other property, although it might lawfully have done so had it adopted the rule of benefits, instead of the frontage rule. Klein v. Cincinnati, 7 Ohio C. C. 266.

When the statute requires the expense of grading a city street preparatory to laying a sidewalk thereon, to be met by a levy upon all the taxable real estate within the corporate limits, a special assessment upon abutting lots, according to their frontage, to pay for such an improvement, is illegal and void. Keys v. Neodesha, 64 Kan. 681, 68 Pac. 625.

If the legislature limits the amount of an assessment which a municipality is authorized to impose on abutting property for the construction of a sewer, to a stated maximum for each front foot, that limit cannot be exceeded, whether the assessment is laid by the front-foot rule, or in proportion to benefits, or ad valorem. Toledo use 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

of Gates v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 4 Ohio C. C. 113.

If a statute requires assessments for the cost of local improvements not to exceed a stated percentage of the enhanced value of the assessed property due to such improvements, an assessment by the front-foot rule must be kept within the statutory limit thus set. Connor v. Cincinnati, 5 Ohio C. D. 199.

Notwithstanding a statute providing for the opening and improving of a public highway authorizes the cost to be assessed pro rata according to the frontage, upon the property abutting upon the highway and upon other property specially benefited, according to the judgment of the assessors as to what is equitable, when such statute requires, in addition, the assessors to certify certain facts in reporting the assessment, the certificate is such a necessary and integral part of a valid assessment under the statute that the omission from it of any statement which the statute requires it to contain is fatal to the assessment. Stebbins v. Kay, supra. Here, said the court, a certificate as to certain facts is required, and this requirement is entirely ignored. The requirement, too, is a material one; it is mandatory, not directory. It served as a protection to the taxpayer. The legislature desired the commissioners to make a solemn declaration that they had done their duty. To them was confided not merely a bare computation. It was their duty to lay such assessments upon adjacent property as seemed to them equitable. It was, therefore, provided that they should certify that the figures they had set down opposite the several lots were the apportionment and assessments made by them as directed in the act.

b. The front-foot rule.

The legislature, as has been seen, has, when not hampered by a constitutional restriction, a perfect right to prescribe the front-foot rule of assessment.

The cost of a street improvement may by law, in proper cases, be apportioned to the property benefited by it, by a mere mathematical calculation, according to a certain rate the front foot. Garvin v. Daussman, 114 Ind. 429, 5 Am. St. Rep. 637, 16 N. E. 826.

An assessment to defray the cost of a local improvement, laid upon abutting property in proportion to its frontage, under statutory authority prescribing that method of apportionment, is valid. Hayden v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 817; Coburn v. Bossert, 13 Ind. App. 359, 40 N. E. 281; Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 78 Ky. 357; Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512, 125 N. W. 392.

The amount and value of the benefits conferred by a street improvement upon abutting property assessed to pay for it may, if the legislature so directs by statute, be properly and fairly measured by the frontage of such property upon the line of the work, and the assessment may equitably be made in proportion to such frontage. New Albany v. Cook, 29 Ind. 220.

A statute authorizing the assessment of abutting property for the cost of street improvements according to the front-foot rule is constitutional, provided the assessment made under its operation does not exceed the benefits conferred upon the assessed property by the improvement. Deane v. Indiana Macadam & Constr. Co. 161 Ind. 371, 68 N. E. 686.

The principle of distributing the cost of a local improvement, or a part of it, upon property located on the street where the improvement is made, according to the frontage of the lots, or upon the basis of a specified sum per linear foot, is within the power and discretion of the legislature to adopt; and as long as the burden is less than the actual cost of the improvement in front of the lot, the landowner has no just ground of complaint. People ex rel. Scott v. Pitt, 169 N. Y. 521, 58 L.R.A. 372, 62 N. E. 662, affirming 64 App. Div. 316, 72 N. Y. Supp. 191.

When a statute requires a special assessment to be levied according to the front-foot rule, no lien is acquired if a different method of levying the assessment is adopted. Fitzgerald v. Sioux City, 125 Iowa, 396, 101 N. W. 268.

An assessment for the cost of macadamizing a city street is illegal and void, if laid in proportion to the amount of benefits received by the assessed property from the improvement, when the municipal charter expressly commands all assessments for street improvements to be laid upon the lots of land abutting on the line of the improvement, and in proportion to the number of front feet of each lot. Lill v. Chicago, 29 Ill. 31.

When a municipal charter provides that the expense of making street improvements shall be levied upon abutting property, not according to its value, but according to its frontage on the line of the improvement, an assessment for such an improvement ad valorem is unauthorized and void. Wilson v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 543, 27 Pac. 474.

When a statute requires the cost of a street pavement to be borne, three fourths by the owners of the property fronting on the work, in equal proportions, according to the running foot front, an assessment based upon the measurement of each square of ground fronting on the street as completed is invalid because contrary to the express terms of the authorizing statute. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Watt, 51 La. Ann. 1345, 26 So. 70; Moody v. Chadwick, 52 La. Ann. 1888, 28 So. 361.

An assessment by the front-foot rule when authorized by a statute in force at the time a local improvement is ordained is valid; and it is not invalidated by the circumstance that such statute was changed before the laying of the assessment, so as to 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

require assessments of that character to be apportioned according to benefits. Ehni v. Cincinnati, 2 Ohio C. D. 283.

A statute prescribing the front-foot rule of apportionment for the cost of a street improvement upon the property abutting upon the line of the work does not authorize any assessment upon property fronting upon a break in the line of improvement, upon which no work is done. Salem v. Henderson, 13 Ind. App. 563, 41 N. E. 1062.

When a municipality ordains the improvement of a street under a statute requiring the cost of such an improvement to be apportioned to the front foot of the property fronting upon such improvement, the mere fact that the city council may have entertained an erroneous opinion as to how the cost of the improvement should be apportioned does not in the slightest degree affect the validity of the ordinance in so far as it orders the improvement and fixes the bounds of the territory to be charged with the cost of making it. Gleason v. Barnett, 106 Ky. 125, 50 S. W. 67.

c. The rule of benefits.

A statute relating to special assessments for street improvements, which requires a city council to ascertain the cost of an improvement, and what portion of such cost shall be assessed on adjoining property, and to assess such portion upon such property as provided by law or ordinance of such city, does not require an assessment of the total cost to be made upon abutting property by the front-foot rule, but empowers the city council to lay the assessment solely with reference to the benefit to the property taxed from the improvement, and is therefore open to no constitutional objection. Burlington Sav. Bank v. Clinton, 106 Fed. 269.

A statute requiring a special assessment for a local improvement to be measured by, and not to exceed, the special benefits accruing to the assessed property from such improvement, and in no case to go beyond a stated sum the front foot along the line thereof, is in no wise obnoxious to a constitutional prohibition against all assessments for the cost of local improvements in excess of the increased value of the assessed property by reason of the special benefits derived from the same. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187, 93 Am. St. Rep. 20, 33 So. 678.

A provision in a municipal charter requiring assessments for street improvements against abutting property to be made in proportion to the amount of the benefits accruing to the abutting owner is not in conflict with a constitutional requirement that such assessments shall not be in excess of the increased value of the assessed property by reason of the special benefits derived from such improvements. Harton v. Avondale, 147 Ala. 458, 41 So. 934.

When the legislature, by statute, requires a municipality, in assessing property for the cost of local improvements, to assess it in proportion to the benefits conferred upon it by the improvement, no other method of levying the assessment will produce a valid one. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 333, 56 N. Y. Supp. 976.

When a statute directs a board of assessors, in assessing the cost of the construction of a sewer, to assess it upon the land benefited by such construction, in proportion to such benefit, the assessors are bound to take as their rule and guide in making their assessment the benefits conferred by the sewer upon the property assessed, and assess it according to such benefits; and if they adopt any other method, the assessment shall be void because made upon an erroneous principle. People ex rel. Keim v. Desmond, 186 N. Y. 232, 78 N. E. 857.

When the legislature, by general or special statute, or in a municipal charter, commands assessments upon property to pay for local improvements to be laid in proportion to the benefits they confer upon the property charged, all such assessments imposed without regard to benefits, arbitrarily, according to the front-foot rule are invalid and void. Clapp v. Hartford, 35 Conn. 66; St. John v. East St. Louis, 50 Ill. 92; Crawfordsville Music Hall Asso. v. Clements, 12 Ind. App. 464, 39 N. E. 540, 40 N. E. 752; Des Moines Union R. Co. v. Des Moines, 140 Iowa, 218, 118 N. W. 293; State, Malone, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 28 N. J. L. 500; State, Ogden, Prosecutor, v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 104; State, Zabriskie, Prosecutor, v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 115; State v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 117; State, Speer, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 38 N. J. L. 168; State, New Brunswick Rubber Co., Prosecutor, v. Street & Sewer Comrs. 38 N. J. L. 190, 20 Am. Rep. 380; Re Klock, 30 App. Div. 24, 51 N. Y. Supp. 897; Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551; Harrisburg v. Adams, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 379; Fraser v. Pittsburg, 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 103; State ex rel. Moore v. Ashland, 88 Wis. 599, 60 N. W. 1001.

The case of State, Ogden, Prosecutor, v. Hudson, supra, was taken upon writ of error to the court of errors and appeals, and the judgment in it was reversed, but only in so far as it had held the ordinance or ordinances of the city of Hudson, under which the improvements were made, were valid and lawful, and had refused to set them aside. The decision that the assessments were unlawful because made in accordance with the front-foot rule, instead of according to benefits, was in effect affirmed by the court of errors and appeals.

A municipal ordinance laying assessments for the whole or a part of the cost of constructing sewers, sidewalks, street pavements, and curbs, upon abutting property according to the front-foot rule, without providing any method by which to ascertain the special benefits accruing to the assessed property from such improvements, or whether or not the assessments laid according to frontage are fair and reasonable, is 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

null and void, when the legislative grant of power to lay assessments for the cost of local improvements requires that they be fair and reasonable and proportioned to resulting benefits. Montgomery v. Foster, 133 Ala. 587, 32 So. 610.

An assessment for the construction of a sewer, laid upon all the parcels of property within a limited assessment district, is invalid for want of conformity to a statute requiring such assessments to be levied in proportion to the special benefits conferred by the sewer upon the property assessed, when, by reason of their proximity or remoteness, there is a substantial difference in the utility of the sewer to the different parcels, which is not taken into account in making the assessment. Bennett v. Emmetsburg, 138 Iowa, 67, 115 N. W. 582.

If a municipal board empowered to assess the cost of a local improvement upon the real property especially benefited, in proportion, as nearly as may be, to the extent of the benefit, and not beyond it, adopts arbitrarily a method of apportioning the cost of an improvement upon a basis of street frontage only, without regard to benefits, the determination is unauthorized and unsupported under the statute by which it acts, and the assessment is invalid. State ex rel. Cunningham v. District Ct. 29 Minn. 62, 11 N. W. 133.

When the statute makes it the duty of commissioners of assessment, in assessing the cost of a local improvement, first to ascertain the lands benefited by such improvement, and, second, to adjudicate the amount each parcel is to pay in proportion to the benefits it receives, their failure to do so, and the adoption of the simple frontage rule of assessment, renders the assessment void. State, Water Comrs., Prosecutors, v. Hudson, 27 N. J. L. 214; State, Malone, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, supra.

A provision in a municipal charter requiring commissioners of assessment for a street improvement to examine the whole matter, and report in writing to the common council what real estate ought to be assessed for such improvement, and what proportion of its expense should be assessed to each separate parcel, and directing such assessments to be laid upon the land and real estate benefited by the improvement, in proportion to the benefits received, is not complied with by a report of the commissioners showing nothing more than the total cost of a street improvement, and the items that make up such total, and then the assessments thereof on the several lots in proportion to their frontage on the street; and an assessment founded thereon is void. Ibid.

When the legislature prescribes by statute, as the legislature of New York did (Laws 1897, chap. 414, § 268), the method of assessing the cost of a village sewer, and directs that it be assessed upon lands within the district marked for assessment, in proportion, as nearly as may be, to the benefit each parcel or lot will derive from the improvement, and that the ratio of such benefit shall be established, the statutory method must be followed in order that the assessment may be legal. If, instead, the front-foot rule of assessment be adopted, the assessment will be void. Re Wheeler, 39 Misc. 484, 80 N. Y. Supp. 204.

If a statute conferring power upon a municipality to make special assessments for street improvements limits its exercise to the benefits conferred by the improvements upon the property assessed, or is not broad enough to enable the municipality to select the mode of assessment,—in either case an assessment by frontage does not meet the requirements of the statute, and is therefore invalid. Violett v. Alexandria, 92 Va. 561, 31 L.R.A. 382, 53 Am. St. Rep. 825, 23 S. E. 909.

When the only authority that a municipal corporation has to levy special assessments for street improvements upon abutting property is a statute which requires such assessments to be laid in proportion to the benefits, upon the property benefited, sufficient to cover the total expense of the work to the center of the street on which it fronts, an assessment made upon the basis of the number of lineal feet of property fronting on a proposed street improvement is invalid and void. Elma v. Carney, 9 Wash. 460, 37 Pac. 707.

Under a statute requiring the cost and expenses of a local improvement to be met by an equitable assessment on the land fronting on the improvement, in proportion to the benefits received, an assessment levied indiscriminately on all the property, at a certain rate per lineal foot, without the exercise of any judgment on the part of the commissioners, or any attempt to ascertain the benefits with respect of particular parcels, is invalid. State, Becker, Prosecutor, v. Gardner, 34 N. J. L. 327.

When a municipal charter, in granting power to levy special assessments to meet the cost of local improvements, provides that such assessments shall not exceed the actual benefits derived from the improvements, an arbitrary assessment, in a given case, of the actual cost of an improvement, without a fair estimate, upon actual view, of the benefit accruing to each parcel of the assessed property, is a fraud upon the rule established by the charter, and invalidates the assessment. Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; Watkins v. Zwietusch, 47 Wis. 513, 3 N. W. 35; Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 336, 61 N. W. 1112.

In Re Klock, 30 App. Div. 24, 51 N. Y. Supp. 897, Herrick, J., reviewed and analyzed the previous decisions in the state of New York in which assessments made according to the front-foot rule were sustained notwithstanding the rule of assessment prescribed was that it should be proportional to benefits conferred, and concluded that they all fell within one or the other of two classes, namely, either where, from the nature of the proceedings before the court under the terms of the statute giving it jurisdiction to review, the question could not be considered, or else cases where the assessors really made their assessment proportional to the benefits, using the front-foot rule as a convenient method of determining such benefits, and where the benefits, by reason of the uniform conditions applying to the assessed property, were substantially alike to all parcels; and thereupon he concluded that none of such decisions require where the assessment is commanded to be made in proportion to benefits, and there is a manifest inequality in the condition, value, and situation of the different parcels of land assessed, that an assessment made purely by computation of frontage should be sustained.

An assessment levied upon a front-foot basis, for the cost of constructing a system of sewers, which the statute requires to be justly and equitably assessed against the owners or occupants of lands deemed to be benefited and assessed, upon each parcel in proportion to the benefits which have been derived from the improvement, is invalid and void, when laid upon land having a large frontage with but a single dwelling upon it, at the same rate the front foot as other lands in the business portion of the city wholly occupied with buildings, and having at once a greater need and a greater benefit from the sewers. People ex rel. Connelly v. Reis, 109 App. Div. 748, 96 N. Y. Supp. 597.

A local assessment for the cost of altering a grade in improving a street, which is required by the statute to show upon its face that the assessment does not exceed the benefits from the improvement, is void when the record fails to show affirmatively that the benefits were taken into account and fairly estimated in making the assessment. Liebermann v. Milwaukee, supra.

It is fundamental that the assessment of benefits shall be made by a rule of apportionment prescribed in the charter of a municipal corporation; and where the rule of actual benefits is prescribed in such charter, a valid assessment can be made only upon an actual view of all the property in the assessment district, and an impartial comparison of the benefits actually accruing to each parcel assessed from the improvement. Hayes v. Douglas County, 92 Wis. 429, 3 L.R.A. 213, 53 Am. St. Rep. 926, 65 N. W. 482.

When a municipal charter requires the cost of street improvements assessed upon lots or parcels of land to be charged in proportion to the benefits secured, an assessment according to the frontage of each lot upon a street improved is void, if it does not affirmatively appear to have been made upon an actual view of the property and a consideration of the benefits actually accruing to each parcel assessed. Ibid.

When a statute requires that a special assessment for the cost of a local improvement shall be imposed according to benefits accruing to the property, an assessment by the frontage rule does not show affirmatively a compliance with the statute. Ibid.

An assessment by the frontage rule, which a mandatory statute requires to be made according to benefits, is presumed to be erroneous, unless the return shows that the assessors considered the matter of benefits, and found them to be in proportion to the frontage of the property assessed. Ibid.

When a provision in a municipal charter requires the city officials, in levying an assessment for the cost of grading a street, to consider and pass upon not only the question of benefits and injuries resulting from the improvement, but also the question of damages caused by and charges by way of compensation for the alteration of the grade, an arbitrary assessment at a uniform rate the front foot for the grading of a street, where the cut as to some of the lots is very much deeper than in respect of others, and varies from 1 foot to 30 feet, is illegal and void. Friedrich v. Milwaukee, 114 Wis. 304, 90 N. W. 174.

Under a statute authorizing a city, by its proper officers, to levy a special tax for the construction or reconstruction of sewers or drains within the city limits, to be assessed against real estate lying within the sewerage district, to the extent of the benefits accruing to such real estate by reason of the improvement, to be determined by the city council, after notice to the property owners, it is a jurisdictional prerequisite to the levy of such special tax that the city council shall find affirmatively, in order to adopt the frontage rule, that the benefits will be equal and uniform upon all the lots and parcels of land in the assessment district; and if it does not so determine, the assessment will be void. John v. Connell, 64 Neb. 233, 89 N. W. 806.

Under a statute (Anno. Stat. § 7629, chap. 12a, § 161, Neb. Comp. Stat. 1897) providing that all special assessments to cover the cost of any public improvements shall be assessed on the property abutting the improvements to the extent of the benefits by reason of the improvement, and that such benefits shall be determined by the city council sitting as a board of equalization after due notice; and in cases where such council so sitting shall find such benefits to be equal and uniform, the assessment may be according to the foot frontage,—it is a prerequisite to the validity of an assessment according to the rule of foot frontage that the city council shall affirmatively find that the benefits accruing to the assessed property are equal and uniform as to all of it. Morse v. Omaha, 67 Neb. 426, 93 N. W. 734.

In Portsmouth Sav. Bank v. Omaha, 67 Neb. 50, 93 N. W. 231, the soundness of the views expressed in the case of John v. Connell, supra, was questioned, and it was argued, that if an error had been committed in the failure of the city council affirmatively to find that the benefits in that case were equal and uniform, it was an error that should have been corrected by a direct proceeding, and not collaterally attacked in suchwise as to invalidate an assessment by the front-foot rule; and it was held that a finding that the property assessed was benefited to the full amount in each case of the proposed levies was not so fatally defective as to warrant an injunction against collecting an assessment levied according to frontage. The decision of that case was followed, upon a later appeal, in 71 Neb. 10, 98 N. W. 457.

When a statute invests a city council with plenary power to change or modify an assessment upon abutting property for the cost of a street improvement, so as to make it conform as nearly as possible to the resulting benefits, a tentative assessment in accordance with the front-foot rule of apportionment is valid, and is conclusive, if not changed pursuant to the provision of the statute. Leeds v. Defrees, 157 Ind. 392, 61 N. E. 930.

When an assessment for a local improvement is required by statute to be made not in excess of the benefits conferred upon the assessed property by the improvement, and an assessment is laid for the entire cost, if there have been mere errors of judgment in determining the amount of benefits, made by the assessing officers, the assessment will not be open to judicial review; but if the officers have failed to exercise any judgment at all, and have arbitrarily laid the assessment without regard to benefits, the assessment will be set aside. Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315.

An assessment in proportion to the benefit, and not according to the market value, or any other rule, is required when a statute provides respecting a local improvement that each parcel of land benefited shall be assessed its proportional part of the whole cost. Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966.

The repeal of a statute authorizing municipalities to levy assessments for local improvements upon abutting property according to the front-foot rule, and the substitution therefor of legislation requiring such assessments to be apportioned according to the benefits conferred by the improvement, renders invalid an assessment made in virtue of the repealed and older statute, about the time the change was made. Martin v. Oskaloosa (Iowa) 99 N. W. 557.

d. The ad valorem rule.

When the legislature directs assessments upon abutting property for the cost of street improvements to be made ad valorem, the local authorities have no power to distribute the expense of the improvements in accordance with benefits. Newman v. Emporia, 41 Kan. 583, 21 Pac. 593.

When the legislature by statute fixes the standard for apportioning the cost of a street improvement to the lots or parcels of ground to be assessed to pay for the same, and directs the assessment to be made ad valorem, the assessing officers are not required to, and should not, base the assessment upon the special benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed. Ibid.

Although a street improvement was started by a city under a law providing for the assessment of the cost thereof upon property in the assessment district ad valorem, and, before the improvement was finished and the assessment laid, the authorizing statute was amended and changed so as to provide for an assessment of abutting property according to its frontage, nevertheless an assessment laid according to frontage will be valid, provided the owners of the assessed property are neither called upon to pay a greater sum of money, nor to pay it at an earlier time, than they would have been required to pay under the former statute. Spokane v. Browne, 8 Wash. 317, 36 Pac. 26.

e. Alternative rules.

The legislature may, and sometimes does, empower a municipal corporation to lay assessments upon abutting property to defray the cost of local improvements, and to apportion the charge according to the frontage of the assessed property, or its value, or in proportion to the benefits it derives from the improvement. When the legislature does this, the municipality is held to have the right to elect which of the authorized methods it will adopt in imposing an assessment. Creighton v. Scott, 14 Ohio St. 438; Jaeger v. Burr, 36 Ohio St. 164; Klein v. Cincinnati, 7 Ohio C. C. 266; Crawford v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 378; Shehan v. Cincinnati, 25 Ohio L. J. 212.

When power is given to a city by statute to levy an assessment to defray the cost of a local improvement in proportion to the benefits to the land assessed, or the value of such land, or by an equal assessment by the front-foot rule upon the lands upon the line of work, the municipality may adopt either method it chooses; but when it adopts one of these methods, it has no power to blend with it either of the other methods. Scranton v. Beckett, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 296.

Whichever method a municipality given by the legislature a choice of three may adopt in assessing the cost and expense of widening and extending a city street, it is bound to respect the limitations, if any, attached to that particular method by the statute. Klein v. Cincinnati, supra.

A city council authorized to assess the expense of grading a public street upon the abutting property, either by the front foot, or according to values, but not beyond 25 per centum of the property values as appraised for taxation, may adopt either rule, provided the limit of 25 per centum is not exceeded. Upington v. Oviatt, 24 Ohio St. 232; Wilder v. Cincinnati, 26 Ohio St. 284; Corry v. Folz, 29 Ohio St. 320.

When the municipal authorities decide by ordinance to assess the cost of a street improvement upon the abutting property by the front foot, being authorized thereunto by a statute giving them a choice of methods, one of which is in proportion to the benefits resulting, the question of benefits cannot be considered, except where the assessment by frontage exceeds a limit imposed by the statute. Crawford v. Cincinnati, supra.

When a statute authorizes a municipal common council to levy an assessment for the cost of a street improvement upon the abutting property by any one of three methods of apportionment, one of such methods must be pursued; and an assessment made by any other method is void. Walker v. Ann Arbor, 118 Mich. 251, 76 N. W. 394.

Thus, an assessment for the cost of constructing a sewer, laid upon abutting property according to the value of each parcel "exclusive of any improvements" upon it, is void when laid under a statute which authorizes a city to levy the cost of an improvement upon adjacent property by foot frontage, according to benefits, or by land values, as the common council shall determine. Ibid.

X. Effect of omission of legislature to prescribe a rule of apportionment.

It is not a constitutional objection to a statute providing for certain local improvements in public streets, and an assessment of the expense thereof upon those immediately interested and whose estates are benefited by such improvement, that the rule of proportion to be followed in making the assessments has not been fixed by the legislature. Howe v. Cambridge, 114 Mass. 388.

Ordinarily the power to adopt the method of apportioning the burden of a local improvement in proportion to the frontage of the property on the line of such improvement charged with its cost has been denied, said the court in Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L.R.A. 563, 33 N. E. 888, unless sanctioned by express legislative authority; but we are committed to the rule that the municipality may adopt it as the measure and standard of apportioning special taxes.

The mode of determining, as nearly as may be, the benefits resulting to property assessed to pay for a street improvement, is discretionary with assessing officers, if not prescribed by the statute under which they act. Scammon v. Chicago, 42 Ill. 192.

Any mode adopted by municipal authorities in assessing contiguous property, whether by lot frontage or otherwise, for a local improvement, which does not violate the Constitution or the statute under which they act, will be sustained in the courts. Enos v. Springfield, 113 Ill. 65.

It is wholly discretionary with municipal authorities to determine for themselves the manner of assessment for local improvements, whether by lot frontage or otherwise, under a Constitution and a statute enacted in conformity therewith, empowering them to make such improvements by special assessments or by special taxation of contiguous property, or otherwise as they shall, by ordinance, prescribe. Ibid.

It is open to a city council in ordaining the construction of a sewer and levying upon contiguous property a special tax to meet one half of the cost thereof, to adopt any method of apportioning the tax it may see fit to select,—whether according to frontage of the property, value, benefits received, or otherwise. Galesburg v. Searles, 114 Ill. 217, 29 N. E. 686.

A municipal ordinance providing for the construction of a sewer, to be paid for, one half by a general tax, and one half by a special tax to be levied on contiguous property, is valid regardless of the rule of apportionment adopted in laying the special tax. Ibid.

An assessment for a proportionate part of the cost of a local improvement, laid under a statute which does not require such assessment to be apportioned according to special benefits to the assessed property from the improvement, may lawfully be apportioned according to the frontage of the assessed property on the line of such improvement. United States ex rel. Henderson v. Edmunds, 3 Mackey, 142.

The cases deciding that no assessment can be lawfully made for a local improvement upon property not benefited by it in fact have no application to assessments made under a statute construed so as not to require such assessments to be confined to specially benefited property. Ibid.

When municipal authorities are given by statute discretion to determine the character and extent of the improvement of streets within the corporate bounds, they are free to determine all matters pertaining to the improvement, provided they do not act arbitrarily and in disregard of the interest of the public, and wantonly oppress individuals. Morrison v. Hershire, 32 Iowa, 271.

A statute providing that each municipal corporation may, by general ordinance, prescribe the mode in which the charge on the respective owners of lots shall be assessed and determined for the cost of a street improvement, authorize the assessment of abutting property in proportion to its frontage upon the line of the work. Burlington v. Quick, 47 Iowa, 222.

A statute authorizing a municipal corporation to adopt the mode in which a charge for a local street improvement shall be assessed upon adjacent property empowers the municipal authorities to provide by resolution regularly and duly adopted, that the expense of a particular street improvement shall be paid by the property holders along each side of the street, in proportion to the frontage each may own. Kendig v. Knight, 60 Iowa, 29, 14 N. W. 78.

When a Constitution imposes no restraint upon the legislature in respect of the apportioning of assessments for local improvements in cities, but leaves it at liberty to adopt the front-foot rule if it chooses to do so, municipal authorities empowered by act of the legislature in general terms to levy assessments upon abutting property for the cost of street improvements may lawfully impose them by the front-foot rule unless prohibited from doing so by some act of the 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) legislature, either general or special. Farrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 379.

When a municipal charter confers upon a city power to pave and reconstruct its streets, and to assess the cost of the work upon adjoining property, without prescribing any method of apportioning that cost, but leaving the municipal authorities free to adopt any method not prohibited by the Constitution or general laws of the state, the municipality may adopt any method of apportioning the cost which the legislature can constitutionally adopt. Ibid.

When the legislature, in a statute empowering a municipality to assess the cost of a street improvement upon abutting property, does not prescribe any rule for estimating the cost of making the improvement or of apportioning it, but leaves both to the judgment and discretion of the municipal authorities, an assessment by the front foot is valid and constitutional. Wilson v. Salem, 24 Or. 504, 34 Pac. 9, 691.

When a municipal charter provides that the expense of improving a public street shall be apportioned to the abutting property on each side of the street proportionately back to the center line of the block, the municipality has a discretion to apportion the total expense of such an improvement pro rata on the abutting property according to its frontage. Oliver v. Newberg, 50 Or. 92, 91 Pac. 470.

A municipality, when authorized to assess the cost of constructing a sewer or of paving a street, upon the local property benefited, by a provision in its charter not restraining it with respect of the method of apportioning the assessment, or empowering it to adopt the front-foot rule, an assessment is valid when laid in proportion to frontage upon the several pieces of property along the line of the work. Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326, 51 N. W. 566.

When, by the terms of the statute authorizing a municipality to levy an assessment for the construction of a sewerage system upon the abutting property benefited thereby, the common council is vested with the discretion to adopt any reasonable and equitable rule of apportionment upon the property in the district, it acts judicially in adopting the foot frontage rule of apportionment, and if it errs in this particular its error does not vitiate the assessment. Ithaca v. Babcock, 72 App. Div. 260, 76 N. Y. Supp. 49, affirming 36 Misc. 49, 72 N. Y. Supp. 519.

The courts of New Jersey are out of harmony with the foregoing line of decisions, and have several times expressed the opinion that under the Constitution of that state, it is essential to the validity of an assessment that the statute authorizing its imposition prescribe the method of apportioning it.

An act of the legislature directing a tax for a local improvement, to be imposed upon particular lands, to be legal, must consist of something more than a mere authorization to assess a sum of money, the cost of a local improvement, upon a designated property. The act must determine the mode of distributing the burdened property on which the tax is to be made, and a certain standard of assessment be established. It cannot properly be left by the legislature to the discretion of others to fix the method. State, Speer, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 38 N. J. L. 168.

A municipal charter providing that the whole amount of the cost and expenses of regulating, grading, and paving any street or section of a street, or graveling, flagging, macadamizing, or otherwise improving any street or section of a street, shall be assessed upon the owners of lands upon the line of said street or section thereof so improved, in such proportion as the common council shall deem just and equitable, is void because it does not limit the burden to be imposed upon the property by the amount of special benefits conferred upon such property, by the street improvement. Bogert v. Elizabeth, 27 N. J. Eq. 568.

The direction is perfectly clear, said the court in Bogert v. Elizabeth, supra, referring to a provision in a municipal charter for the assessment upon abutting property of the total cost of a street improvement, that the entire burden is to be borne by the land along the line of the improvement, and the ratio of distribution among the respective lots is left to the judgment of the common council. Such a power, according to local rules now at rest in this state, cannot be exacted. The whole clause is nugatory and void, and all proceedings under it are not mere irregularities, but nullities.

A statute authorizing the imposition of an assessment for the cost of a road improvement upon the report of a township committee, designating the real estate fronting upon and adjacent to such improvement that ought to be assessed, and what proportion of the expense thereof shall be assessed upon each parcel of land, is unconstitutional because it in nowise limits the amount of the assessment to special and peculiar benefits conferred upon the assessed property. State, New York & G. L. R. Co., Prosecutor, v. Kearney Twp. 55 N. J. L. 463, 26 Atl. 800.

XI. Special benefits the justification and foundation of local assessments.

Local assessments cannot be imposed to pay for an improvement of general public benefit. Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615; Craig v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 265.

Local assessments are justifiable on the ground that the locality is specially benefited by the outlay of the money raised by their means, and if this is not the case no reason can be assigned why the tax is not a general one. State, Agent, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729.

A law which would attempt to make one person or a given number of persons, under the guise of local assessments, pay a general revenue for the public at large, would not be an exercise of the taxing power, but 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) an act of confiscation. McCormack v. Patchin, 53 Mo. 33, 14 Am. Rep. 440.

Laws which cast the burdens of the public on a few individuals, no matter what the pretense, nor how seeming their analogy to constitutional enactments, are in their essence despotic and tyrannical, and it becomes the judiciary to stand firmly by the fundamental law in defense of those general, great, and essential principles of liberty and free government for the establishment and perpetuation of which the Constitution itself was ordained. Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255; Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8.

In Mauldin v. Greenville, 42 S. C. 293, 27 L.R.A. 284, 46 Am. St. Rep. 723, 20 S. E. 842, the supreme court of South Carolina decided that no constitutional right existed in a municipality, or in the legislature to grant power to a municipality, to assess the cost of street improvements exclusively upon abutting lands to the extent of the supposed benefits conferred; but that the power was limited to assessing the cost of sidewalks, drains, and sewers upon abutting property and that for other and general street improvements a general tax must be levied and it therefore decided that an assessment for a portion of the cost of paving the roadway in a city street, computed pro rata according to the frontage of the assessed property, was unconstitutional and void.

The reasoning of the court in Mauldin v. Greenville, supra, to sustain its conclusion that an assessment for the cost of paving a public street, laid according to frontage upon abutting property, was unconstitutional and void, rested upon the proposition that all highways belong to the general public, and in the earlier days might have been laid out across private lands without even compensating the owners; and while the Constitution of 1868 had provided for compensation to be made when private lands were taken for public highways, yet in all other respects the status of the public highway was unchanged; that being a public work and for the benefit of the public at large, its cost could be met only by a general public tax. This reasoning did not apply to sidewalks and surface drains for the adjoining property, and consequently assessments could be laid for the construction of sidewalks and lateral drains.

A local improvement is a public improvement which, by reason of its being confined to a locality, enhances the value of adjacent property, as distinguished from benefits diffused by it through the municipality. Chicago v. Blair, 149 Ill. 310, 24 L.R.A. 412, 36 N. E. 829; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 154 Ill. 173, 38 N. E. 626.

Assessments, as distinguished from other kinds of taxation, are those special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of municipal improvements, such as grading and paving streets, improving harbors of navigable rivers within the limits of the municipality, and the like, which are necessary to pay for the improvement, and are laid with reference to the special benefit which the property is supposed to have derived from the expenditures. Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599.

Special assessments for street or local improvements are assessed upon property with reference to the benefits derived from the improvement, and constitute a tax on the benefits rather than on the property. Buchan v. Broadwell, 88 Mo. 31.

It is but the demand of simple justice that special contributions in consideration of special benefits should be made by those who receive the benefits. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2.

Taxation according to benefits received is neither unequal nor unjust. Re Washington Ave. supra.

The rule that he who reaps the benefit should bear the burden of a local improvement is just and equitable. Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 589, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663.

It is only just that those who are chiefly partakers of the benefits of a local improvement should bear proportionally a larger share of the burden of its cost. Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367.

An assessment made upon the basis of a benefit regards nothing but the benefits to be conferred upon the particular estate. The levy is made on the supposition that the estate, having received the benefits of a public improvement, ought to relieve the public from the expense of making it. Asberry v. Roanoke, 91 Va. 562, 42 L.R.A. 636, 22 S. E. 360.

If the assessment method of taxation is employed to pay, in whole or in part, for a local public improvement, and in making such improvement the property of individuals, owing to its proximity, is specially benefited, it is but just that such property should pay toward the cost of the improvement a sum equal to the value of the special benefits conferred; for to this extent it is peculiarly benefited over and above that of other individual members of the public. Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551.

The right to make special assessments to meet the cost of local public improvements rests upon the underlying principle that the property upon which they are imposed is peculiarly benefited by the improvement, and therefore the owners do not in fact pay anything in excess of what they receive by reason of such improvement. Adams v. Roanoke, 102 Va. 53, 45 S. E. 881.

It is well to remark, said the court in Arnold v. Knoxville, 115 Tenn. 195, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 837, 90 S. W. 469, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 881, that the power to assess is not unrestricted as to amount, but must be measured by the benefits received or reasonably anticipated.

Special assessments, in distinction from general taxation, rest upon the idea of equivalents. Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159.

All assessments for local improvements are laid upon the idea that property assessed is benefited by the improvement, in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

proportion to the charge. Nevin v. Roach, 86 Ky. 492, 5 S. W. 546.

The theory or principle upon which local assessments rest and are sustained is that the property upon which they are laid has been or will be specially and peculiarly benefited by the improvements on account of which the assessments are imposed. Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L.R.A. 135, 30 Pac. 1041; Denver v. Kennedy, 33 Colo. 80, 80 Pac. 122, 467; New Albany v. Cook, 29 Ind. 220; Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124; State v. Pillsbury, 82 Minn. 359, 85 N. W. 175; Seibert v. Tiffany, 8 Mo. App. 33; Allen v. Krenning, 23 Mo. App. 561; Heman v. Allen, 156 Mo. 534, 57 S. W. 559, affirmed in 181 U. S. 402, 45 L. ed. 922, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645; Litchfield v. Vernon, 41 N. Y. 123; Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L.R.A. 330, 14 S. E. 521; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 140 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069; Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615; Craig v. Philadelphia, 80 Pa. 265; Re Morewood Ave. 159 Pa. 20, 28 Atl. 123, 132.

Assessments for local improvements in municipalities are not founded upon any idea of revenue, but upon the theory of benefits conferred by improvements upon the assessed property. Norfolk v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. 224.

The rule which municipalities must observe in assessing the cost of a public improvement is that the property assessed must be specially benefited by such improvement. Denver v. Kennedy, supra.

The keynote of every local assessment is that it must be made according to the benefits conferred. Donovan v. Oswego, 90 App. Div. 397, 86 N. Y. Supp. 155.

Assessments on individual property for public improvements can only be made to the extent of local and special benefits received therefrom. McKeesport v. Soles, 165 Pa. 628, 30 Atl. 1019.

Special assessments for local improvements find their only justification in the peculiar and special benefits which such improvements bestow upon the particular property assessed. Kirst v. Street Improv. Dist. No. 120, 86 Ark. 1, 109 S. W. 526.

Special taxation, as spoken of in the Illinois Constitution, is based upon the supposed benefits to the contiguous property as well as are special assessments, and the two differ only in the mode of ascertaining the benefits. Craw v. Tolono, 96 Ill. 255, 36 Am. Rep. 143; East St. Louis v. Illinois C. R. Co. 238 Ill. 296, 87 N. E. 407.

Special assessments and special taxes for local improvements go upon the basis of benefit to the particular property, and are authorized only when the local improvement either actually or presumptively benefits the particular property in an amount equal to the burden imposed. Lightner v. Peoria, 150 Ill. 80, 37 N. E. 69.

We have held in many cases, said the court in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, 153 Ill. 649, 39 N. E. 1077, that special taxation for a local improvement, as well as special assessment of benefits for the same, proceed upon the theory of benefits to the property levied upon.

A district created for taxation for a local improvement may, as a whole, be assessed only to the extent of the sum of special benefits actually received by the several parcels of property charged with the cost of such improvement; and each parcel of property taxed may be assessed only to the extent that it actually receives special benefits from such improvement. Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L.R.A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484, 57 N. E. 114; Martin v. Wills, 157 Ind. 153, 60 N. E. 1021.

The whole theory of local taxation or assessments is that the improvements for which they are levied afford a remuneration in the way of benefits. McCormack v. Patchin, 53 Mo. 33, 14 Am. Rep. 440; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 300, 51 L.R.A. 763, 83 N. W. 1074.

It is elementary, according to the court in Northern P. R. Co. v. Seattle, 46 Wash. 674, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 121, 123 Am. St. Rep. 955, 91 Pac. 244, that the whole theory of special assessment is based on the doctrine that the property against which it is levied derives some special benefit from the local improvement.

The whole and only foundation for special assessments, according to the court in Morse v. Omaha, 67 Neb. 426, 93 N. W. 734, lies in the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed.

This court has consistently held for thirty years, it was declared in the opinion in Adams v. Shelbyville, supra, that special benefits are the only foundation for special assessments.

Upon the theory of benefits, declared the court in Violett v. Alexandria, 92 Va. 561, 31 L.R.A. 382, 53 Am. St. Rep. 825, 23 S. E. 900, rests all the decisions of this court and of other courts upholding assessments for street improvements apportioned upon abutting property by any rule, and upon this theory alone are they looked upon with favor by taxing powers; nor can they by sound reasons and principles be justified upon any other theory.

It was said in Robinson v. Burlington, 50 Iowa, 241, that a special assessment is allowable on the theory that the improvement for which it is made is of special value to the property owner, and in Muscatine v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 88 Iowa, 291, 55 N. W. 100, this remark was referred to by Robinson, Ch. J., with the statement, it is undoubtedly true that the law contemplates a special benefit, from the pavement of the street, to the owner of property which is adjacent to it.

The right to impose the special burden of an assessment is founded in the idea that whilst the public health, comfort, and convenience demand the improvement, its construction is at the same time of special and peculiar benefit to certain private property in the immediate vicinity. Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The essential element in a local improvement is, as the term implies, a benefit to the property upon which the cost of it is assessed, in a manner local in its nature, and which does not attach to other property of a like character. Denver v. Kennedy, 33 Colo. 80, 80 Pac. 122, 467.

The theory upon which local assessments for street improvements are allowed to be laid upon the abutting property is that such improvements, aside from the mere general advantage resulting to the community at large, will result in some special advantage to the particular owners, in which the general public does not participate. Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408; State, Agents, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729; Kinston v. Wooten, 150 N. C. 295, 63 S. E. 1061.

Special assessments are based on the theory that the property assessed will be specially benefited thereby above the benefits received by the public at large; and, while the results may not be such as are anticipated, still the principle holds good. Arnold v. Knoxville, 115 Tenn. 195, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 837, 90 S. W. 469, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 881.

Upon the theory that a local improvement is of special and peculiar benefit to the private property in its immediate vicinity depends absolutely the power to assess such property to defray the cost of such improvement. Allman v. District of Columbia, supra.

Assessments for street improvements rest upon the basis of benefits, actual or presumptive, to the property assessed. Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 78 Ky. 357.

The basis of all assessments for city street improvements is presumptive benefits received. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. v. Voris, 110 Ky. 315, 61 S. W. 474.

Assessments for local improvements are justified upon the theory that the assessed property is correspondingly enhanced in value, and should, therefore, pay the cost of such improvements. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 190, 37 L. ed. 132, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 293; Hayden v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 817; Lightner v. Peoria, 150 Ill. 80, 37 N. E. 69; Garvin v. Daussman, 114 Ind. 429, 5 Am. St. Rep. 637, 16 N. E. 826; Re East 136th Street, 127 App. Div. 672, 111 N. Y. Supp. 916; King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2; McGonigle v. Allegheny, 44 Pa. 118; Sands v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 571, 31 Am. Rep. 742.

Assessments for street improvements are upheld upon the ground that the assessed property charged with the cost of the improvement is enhanced in value to an amount equal to the sum charged against it, and that its owner has received a peculiar benefit from the improvement which the citizens do not share in common. Marion Bond Co. v. Johnson, 29 Ind. App. 294, 64 N. E. 626.

The fundamental fact upon which the validity of special assessments for the cost of a local improvement rests, is an increment of benefit to the property taxed resulting from the improvement. Union P. R. Co. v. Abilene, 78 Kan. 820, 98 Pac. 224.

Local taxes for local improvements are merely assessments upon the property benefited by such improvements, and to pay for the benefits which they are supposed to confer. Lots, being increased in value, are better adapted for the use of town lots, and upon no other ground will such taxation for a moment stand. Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 525.

The doctrine that the standard to be fixed by statutory enactment must be that the assessment can only be laid upon the principle of exceptional benefits, and not in excess thereof, said the court in State, New York & G. L. R. Co., Prosecutor, v. Kearney Twp. 55 N. J. L. 403, 26 Atl. 800, has been so frequently established in our own reports of decided cases that a further discussion of the subject here by the court appears to be useless.

The mode of apportionment by which local assessments are to be made must have reference to special benefits accruing to the property because of the improvement,—that is, benefits in addition to those received by the community in general; and the rule of apportionment must be such as to make the assessments in proportion to such benefits as nearly as is reasonably practicable. Pueblo v. Robinson, 12 Colo. 593, 21 Pac. 899.

Local assessments can only be constitutional when imposed to pay for local improvements clearly conferring special benefits on the property assessed, and to the extent of those benefits. Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615; Craig v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 265.

The legislature cannot constitutionally fix, or authorize a municipality to fix, an arbitrary basis for an assessment to pay for local improvements to be imposed upon property without regard to benefits. State v. Pillsbury, 82 Minn. 359, 85 N. W. 175.

Under a Constitution requiring taxes to be proportional and reasonable, a special tax levied upon abutting property to pay for a street improvement can be justified only when there is a special benefit to the property from the expenditure on account of which the assessment is made. Sears v. Boston, 173 Mass. 71, 43 L.R.A. 834, 53 N. E. 138.

Where a landowner assessed for a public improvement receives and can receive from such improvement no other or greater benefits than the community at large the assessment is invalid. Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255.

A local assessment cannot be imposed where it is clearly established that the improvement for which the charge is made is for the public benefit, without any advantage to the property assessed. Craig v. Philadelphia, supra.

No valid assessment for a street improvement can lawfully be made on property which is not actually benefited to some extent by such improvement. Re East 136th Street, supra.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

An assessment to meet the cost of a local improvement cannot stand if no benefit whatever peculiar to the property assessed results to it from the improvement. Kinston v. Wooten, 150 N. C. 295, 63 S. E. 1061.

Where there is no special and peculiar benefit due to a local improvement conferred upon adjacent property, there can be no valid assessment of its cost laid upon such property. Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8.

It is the special benefit to the private lot owner which gives legal validity to a legislative act authorizing an assessment for a street improvement; for unless some special advantage results to the lot owner in consequence of the street improvement for and on account of which his property has been assessed, the effect of that assessment is arbitrarily to deprive the citizen of his property. Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408.

Special taxes cannot be levied unless the property charged receives a corresponding physical, material, and substantial benefit from the exaction. Otherwise, it is an attempt under the guise of taxation to take private property without just compensation, in violation of the Constitution. Owensboro v. Sweeney, 129 Ky. 607, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 181, 130 Am. St. Rep. 477, 111 S. W. 364; McCormack v. Henderson, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 854, 111 S. W. 368.

To warrant the assessment of a special tax to pay for a local improvement, it must appear that the property assessed is benefited by that improvement. Re Casacalvo & M. Streets, 20 La. Ann. 497; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Gogreve, 41 La. Ann. 251, 5 So. 848; Rosetta Gravel, Paving & Improv. Co. v. Jollisaint, 51 La. Ann. 804, 25 So. 477.

When it is clear that lots having no present connection with a sewer derive no special and peculiar advantage from its construction, and when nothing indicates that they ever will certainly have any special benefit, to impose a present lien and obligation to pay where the special benefit is contingent on the will of the municipality would be a clear violation of the fundamental basis on which all such assessments rest. Parker's Appeal, 169 Pa. 433, 32 Atl. 574.

A statute authorizing the expense of paving the roadbed of a street, to be assessed in the proportion of two thirds on the abutting property and the other third on the public at large, is unconstitutional and void, because it does not limit the assessments upon the private property by the amount of special and peculiar benefits conferred thereon by the improvement. State, Agents, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729.

An act chartering a private corporation for the purpose of reclaiming large tracts of swamp land, and providing for the appointment of commissioners to enter into a contract with such corporation for the drainage of many acres of meadows, the property of various individuals, and empowering such commissioners to assess upon the lands, when reclaimed, a just proportion of the contract price, is unconstitutional because it does not limit the assessments in amount by the extent of the benefits conferred upon the property assessed. Coster v. Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 54, affirmed in 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634.

Under our decisions, said the court in Benjamin v. Bog & Fly Meadow Co. 68 N. J. L. 197, 52 Atl. 215, a compulsory assessment for the special benefit resulting to land from the improvement thereof must generally be levied in proportion to the benefits received, and assessments cannot be sustained when levied in proportion to the quantity of land.

A statute which authorizes a municipality to construct street improvements, and lay local assessments on the property fronting thereon for so much of the expense as it shall deem just and equitable, is unconstitutional because it does not prescribe any fixed certain legal standard for the assessment which, to be valid and constitutional, must be limited to particular benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed. Barnes v. Dyer, 56 Vt. 469.

Since the decisions of Tide Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634, and of State, Agents, Prosecutor, v. Newark, supra, it has been settled law in this state, said the court in Doughten v. Camden, 72 N. J. L. 451, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 817, 111 Am. St. Rep. 680, 63 Atl. 170, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 902, that the cost of local improvements may be imposed, under the power to tax, upon lands peculiarly benefited thereby, but only to the extent of the benefits so conferred. Legislation intended to confer power to impose such tax on lands, to be valid, must not only limit the power to lands peculiarly benefited, but must expressly or by necessary implication limit the imposition to the amount of the peculiar benefits conferred. The cases in which this doctrine have been applied are too numerous and well known to require citation.

It must not be inferred that all American jurists accept the views just set forth. There have been several strong dissents.

The theory that a local assessment can only be commensurate with the enhancement of value of the assessed property, due to the improvement for which it was imposed, was repudiated and utterly reprobated by Corliss, Ch. J., in Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N. W. 242.

And Mr. Justice Holmes, in delivering the opinion of the majority of the court in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 107 U. S. 430, 49 L. ed. 819, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406, treated the theory almost contemptuously. He virtually regards the expression of such theory as mere sound and fury, signifying nothing.

The argument against the theory has been temperately stated in several cases, of which it will be sufficient to cite two.

If the right to make improvements, said Campbell, J., in Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 274, and charge them to property 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

owners, is to be based upon the idea of private benefits created, I am entirely clear that no such power is maintainable. No principle is better settled than that private property cannot be taken by the government for private use, and it is equally clear, on principle, that taxation in general can only be justifiable for public purposes, affecting large or small localities. The improvement of private property is no part of the object of government. Unless a work is needed by the public, the public have no right to make it, and, if needed, no individual should be compelled to pay except as a proportionate share of the public burden.

An assessment to pay for a street improvement is levied upon abutting property, not because of any special benefits its owners derive from the improvement, but because the public interest requires that the improvement be made, and the law authorizes special taxation for such an object. Morrison v. Hershire, 32 Iowa, 271.

In my opinion, said Beck, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Warren v. Henry, 31 Iowa, 31, in the exercise of the power of taxation the special participation in the benefits of a particular tax on the part of the taxpayer has nothing to do with the right to impose the tax. I find no support for my conclusion, upon the ground that the tax may be sustained because the property is benefited by the improvement. The property holder has a right to determine whether he will or will not enjoy certain benefits. The city cannot determine that question for him, and tax him in order to bestow them upon him. I base my conclusion upon the simple ground that the object of the taxation—the improvement of the streets—is a public object which will support it, that the system of taxing the abutting lots, in its particular application, secures such a just and fair distribution of the burden as to be within the rule requiring uniformity of taxation.

In Iowa, subsequently enacted statutes (acts 28 Gen. Assem. chap. 29, § 1, Code Supp. 1900, § 92a, and Code Supp. 1902, § 792a) require assessments for public improvements to be proportioned to the special benefits conferred by such improvements upon the property assessed. Reed v. Cedar Rapids, 137 Iowa, 107, 111 N. W. 1013; Des Moines Union R. Co. v. Des Moines, 140 Iowa, 218, 118 N. W. 293.

And legislation of similar character has not been uncommon in other states.

XII. Assessments that exceed benefits.

The courts generally acknowledge that every assessment imposed to pay for a local improvement which exceeds in amount the value of the benefits, actual or potential, that accrue to the assessed property from such improvement, is, at least to the extent of the excess, void.

While it is but just that special contributions in consideration of special benefits should be made by the recipients of such benefits, such contributions, by the same justice, ought not to be compelled in any case beyond the benefits conferred. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2.

In so far as a local improvement exceeds in cost the special benefits it confers upon the several parcels of property within the assessment district, the excess is a benefit to the municipality at large, and must be borne by the general treasury. Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 407, 40 L.R.A. 707, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484, 57 N. E. 114; Martin v. Wills, 157 Ind. 153, 60 N. E. 1021.

When private property has, in an assessment, once paid the value of the special benefits it has received from a local improvement, its owners stand in the same relation to any residue of the cost of such improvement that may remain unpaid, that other members of the public do, hence all the public must bear the burden of paying such residue by general taxation. Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551.

If one is required to pay a special assessment upon his property, in addition to the general assessment which he pays equally with everyone else, this special assessment cannot properly be founded upon anything but benefits to the property. If he pays his proper proportion of the general tax, and then pays a special assessment greater in amount than the benefit he receives, his entire tax is excessive, unreasonable, and disproportionate. Hence, under a Constitution which requires that taxes shall be proportional and reasonable, a system which imposes upon property, in addition to its share of the general tax, a special assessment without an equivalent in benefit, is unconstitutional. White v. Gove, 183 Mass. 333, 67 N. E. 359.

A municipal charter which provides that each lot shall be assessed for the labor and materials necessary to grade the street in front of it, and for its share of the intersections, totally disregards the well-established doctrine that assessments of this character shall not exceed the benefits conferred upon the assessed property. Hence, an assessment pursuant thereto is void. State v. Van Tassel, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 37 N. J. L. 128.

An assessment for a local street improvement laid upon abutting property cannot exceed the special benefits conferred by the improvement upon such property. Lincoln v. Street Comrs. 176 Mass. 210, 57 N. E. 356.

In no case can an assessment for the construction of a sewer be made that exceeds the special benefits received by the estate assessed from the work. Cheney v. Beverly, 188 Mass. 81, 74 N. E. 306.

All special assessments upon abutting property along the line of a street, for improvements or service, must be proportioned to the special benefits derived by the assessed property, and if these are exceeded the assessment is illegal. Corcoran v. Cambridge, 199 Mass. 5, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 187, 85 N. E. 155.

Thus, an assessment of about $20 upon 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a vacant city lot for street sprinkling for a single season is so far in excess of any benefit received as to be invalid unless reduced. Ibid.

To be valid, an assessment for the cost of a municipal street improvement upon lands benefited thereby must be confined to the benefits received, and may not exceed them in amount. State, Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., Prosecutors, v. Passaic, 37 N. J. L. 137; State, Graham, Prosecutor, v. Pateron, 37 N. J. L. 380; Passaic v. State, 37 N. J. L. 538.

While the cost of a public improvement may be imposed upon property peculiarly benefited, it never can be imposed beyond the amount of the benefits the improvement confers. Coster v. Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 54, affirmed in 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634.

The cost of a public improvement may be imposed on designated property to the extent to which that property is exceptionally benefited, but any burden beyond that measure is illegal. State, Agents, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729.

An assessment for a public improvement clearly shown to exceed the benefits conferred by such improvement on the property assessed is void. State, Prevett, Prosecutor, v. Bayonne, 63 N. J. L. 202, 42 Atl. 773.

It is now settled law in this court, as it is in the Supreme Court of the United States and in many other courts, it was said in Dexter v. Boston, 176 Mass. 247, 79 Am. St. Rep. 306, 57 N. E. 379, that, after the construction of a public improvement, a local assessment for the cost of it cannot be laid upon real estate in substantial excess of the benefit received by the property. Such assessments must be founded on the benefits and be proportional to the benefits. The principle involved has been so recently and so fully considered in the cases that it is unnecessary to discuss it at length in this opinion. It was shown in Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L.R.A. 642, 51 N. E. 204, that, as applied to the facts of that case and of many supposable cases, the requirements of the statutes might produce assessments upon some estates greatly in excess of the benefits received, and, as compared with other estates, greatly disproportionate to the benefits, and for this reason the statute was declared unconstitutional.

We have no doubt of the correctness of our decisions, said the court in White v. Gove, supra, which hold that special assessments upon property for the cost of public improvements are in violation of our Constitution if they are in excess of the benefits received.

Any rule or method of assessment prescribed by the legislature for apportioning the cost of a local improvement is to be regarded as subject to the limitation that the assessment made pursuant thereto shall not exceed the special benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property as-essed. Indianapolis v. Holt, 155 Ind. 222, 57 N. E. 966, 988, 1100.

A determination of a rule or principle of general application which will make special assessments upon abutting property for the cost of local improvements reasonable and proportional according to the benefits they confer, by the legislature itself or by a body appointed by the legislature to make the assessments, has actually been upheld by the courts, but if its effect plainly is to make an assessment upon any estate substantially in excess of the benefit received, it is judicially annulled. Sears v. Boston, 173 Mass. 71, 43 L.R.A. 834, 53 N. E. 138.

Any exaction by special assessment for a local improvement in excess of the special benefit derived from it by the assessed property is, to the extent of such excess, a taking of property without compensation. Kirst v. Street Improv. Dist. No. 120, 86 Ark. 1, 109 S. W. 526.

The special benefit from an improvement to assessed property being the limit to the power and discretion to assess it, when that is clearly exceeded the assessment ceases to be a tax, and becomes a taking of private property for public use without compensation. Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8.

To compel the owner of property to bear the expense of a public improvement beyond the amount of the peculiar and particular advantage which he derives from such improvement is, to the extent of the excess, to take private property for public use without compensation. Coster v. Tide Water Co. supra.

It must be constantly borne in mind, said the court in Morse v. Omaha, 67 Neb. 426, 93 N. W. 734, that the whole and only foundation for special assessments lies in the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, and an assessment in excess of the benefits so conferred is a taking of property for the public use without compensation, and is illegal.

If, by an assessment to pay for a local improvement, a sum is exacted in any instance in excess of the special benefits conferred upon the assessed property by such improvement, it is, as to such excess in that instance, private property unjustly taken for public use without compensation to the owner. Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551.

According to the best considered of the modern cases and most reliable authorities, said the court in Walsh v. Barron, 61 Ohio St. 15, 76 Am. St. Rep. 354, 55 N. E. 164, an assessment, being sustainable only on the theory of special benefits conferred on the land by the improvement over those received by the general public, is necessarily limited to the value of the benefits so conferred. The value of the entire benefits so conferred may be assessed upon the land for the cost of the improvement. More, however, cannot be exacted without impairing the inviolability of private property guaranteed by the Constitution, or in other, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) if not more appropriate, words, confiscating it.

In Moale v. Baltimore, 61 Md. 224, it was objected that the ordinance assailed should not be sustained because the front-foot rule of apportionment had been adopted, and that, by the application of that rule in the particular case, a part of the property of the complainants fronting upon the street had been taxed beyond its value, and thus virtually confiscated.

We do not understand, said the court, the bill to present such a case as the argument suggests. If it did, it would raise a very grave question whether the owner could be forced to pay the assessment in excess of the value of his property, or be compelled to submit to a rule which in effect took from him his whole property. The subjection of the possibility of such case illustrates the possible hardship of the rule, but we do not think that this is such a case.

An assessment for the cost of a local improvement apportioned upon property declared by the legislative body to be benefited by such improvement, according to the front-foot rule, is valid in the absence of any showing that the amounts assessed were substantially in excess of any benefits conferred. McMillan v. Butte, 30 Mont. 220, 76 Pac. 203.

In the state of New Jersey the record of the assessment proceedings must apparently show affirmatively that the burden laid does not exceed the benefits conferred, or the assessment will not be held valid.

To be valid, an assessment upon lands for the cost and expense of opening a street must affirmatively appear to have been made in proportion to, and not in excess of, the benefits specially conferred by the street opening upon the assessed property. State, Buess, Prosecutor, v. West Hoboken, 51 N. J. L. 267, 17 Atl. 110.

An assessment which does not appear affirmatively to be not in excess of the benefits conferred by the work on account of which the assessment is made is invalid. Poillon v. Rutherford, 65 N. J. L. 538, 47 Atl. 439.

Under a village charter providing for the assessment of the cost of grading streets upon the abutting lands in proportion to the benefits to be received by each parcel assessed, it is essential to the validity of an assessment that it affirmatively and unequivocally appear that it does not exceed the benefits. Passaic v. State, 37 N. J. L. 538; State, Bogart, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 38 N. J. L. 57.

An assessment for the cost of a street improvement which does not affirmatively appear upon the return of the commissioners of assessment to be not greater than the benefits conferred by the improvement upon the assessed property is fatally defective. State, Hutton, Prosecutor, v. West Orange Twp. 39 N. J. L. 453.

The Oregon supreme court in King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2, declared itself inclined to believe that the better doctrine deducible from adjudged cases, including those of the Supreme Court of the United States, is that an assessment for the cost of a local improvement will be upheld wherever it is not patent and obvious, from the nature and location of the property involved, district prescribed, the condition and character of the improvement, cost and relative value of the property to the assessment, that the plant or method adopted has resulted in imposing a burden in substantial excess of the benefits or disproportionate within the district as among the several property owners.

The supreme court of Pennsylvania has decided that it does not affect the validity of an assessment made under authority of law by the front-foot rule upon a city lot, if the lot burdened is a long, narrow strip, and not worth the amount of the assessment against it. Harrisburg v. McCormick, 129 Pa. 213, 18 Atl. 126. The courts in other states, however, consider such assessments illegal.

An assessment upon property for the cost of a public improvement that is not only in excess of the benefits conferred on it, but of its value with the benefits added by the improvement, cannot legally be made where the property owner complaining of the charge in no way promoted the improvement. Walsh v. Barron, supra.

An assessment for the cost of a street improvement exceeding in amount the total value of the property upon which the charge is laid, where it is established that only a portion of the value of said property can be credited to the improvement, is void. Marion Bond Co. v. Johnson, 29 Ind. App. 294, 64 N. E. 626.

When the proof conclusively establishes that the cost of a street improvement is far in excess of the entire value of the property assessed to pay for it after the improvement has been made, the courts properly refuse to enforce a lien upon the property. Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115.

While the judgment of the legislative municipal authorities is conclusive in all cases of doubt as to the benefits conferred upon property assessed to pay for a street improvement, nevertheless, when the total value of the property taxed after the improvement is made is less, or not more, than the cost of such improvement, there is no room for difference of opinion, and to enforce the assessment is to take from the owner his property without compensation. Ibid.

If, in the laying of an assessment for a street improvement, the cost of such improvement is so disproportioned to the value of the estate sought to be improved as that the levy of the assessment amounts virtually to confiscation of the assessed property, the assessment cannot stand as a legal or valid exercise of the power to tax for such improvements. Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408, s. c. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) subsequent appeal, 101 Ga. 697, 29 S. E. 14.

In Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408, the defendant was the owner of a strip of land 407 feet long and 7 feet wide at one end and 3 feet wide at the other, lying the long way to the street, for the improvement of which it was assessed by the front-foot rule. The highest estimated value of this strip of land after the completion of the improvement was $260, and the assessment upon it for its pro rata share by frontage of the cost of the work was $721.28. According to these figures, said the court, this assessment, if upheld as legal, would appropriate to the public use entirely the private property of the landowner and in addition leave him in debt to the city in the sum of $461.28. In these circumstances the defendant applied to the superior court for an injunction to restrain the collection of the assessment. "The exact extent of benefit," continued the court, "necessary to uphold such an assessment is incapable of definition; but it may be asserted with perfect confidence, that the present is one of those extreme cases of such doubtful benefit and probable spoliation as will justify the interference of a court of equity, in order to prevent the citizen from being arbitrarily deprived of his property." The assessment in this case, finally, was altogether annulled. Vide, 101 Ga. 697, 29 S. E. 14.

The assessment which the court in Iowa Pipe & Tile Co. v. Callanan, 125 Iowa, 358, 67 L.R.A. 408, 106 Am. St. Rep. 311, 101 N. W. 141, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 7, held void because it was so manifestly in gross excess of any possible benefits, and so unequal and unjust as to amount to a virtual confiscation of the property, was one which was made in this peculiar circumstance. The property assessed consisted of three lots originally 33 feet wide and 100 feet long, end to end, of which a strip 25 feet in width had been condemned under the power of eminent domain for a new street, leaving a strip 8 feet in width, 300 feet long, which was assessed according to its frontage on the new street by the front-foot rule, for the construction of a sewer,—a rule which was applied to other property on the street varying in depth from 120 to 175 feet. Each lot property owner, before the assessment was made, had, besides, conveyed away a strip 5 feet wide off one of the lots, so that for 100 feet his property was only 3 feet wide on the line of the street. These facts brought the case within the well-recognized exception that permits and requires assessments made oppressively and in abuse of power to be annulled by the court of equity.

XIII. Equation of benefit and burden to particular pieces of property.

When the power of a municipality to lay assessments for public improvements is limited to cases where the land of somebody is "especially benefited" by the improvement, and assessments must not materially exceed the benefits conferred, there can be no valid assessment where there are no benefits. Naugatuck R. Co. v. Waterbury, 78 Conn. 193, 61 Atl. 474.

The legislature, though vested with the widest discretion to declare the character and extent of a public improvement, to fix the district taxable for it, and to direct the manner in which assessments to meet its cost shall be laid and collected, nevertheless cannot, by its mere declaration, create, where they do not in fact exist, the special and peculiar benefits to the property subjected to assessment which are the fundamental prerequisites of any assessment at all. Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8.

The term "benefits derived thereby," in a statute authorizing an assessment upon property for the cost of constructing sewers, said the court in Ithaca v. Babcock, 72 App. Div. 260, 76 N. Y. Supp. 49, serves to confer the idea of highest equity. The difficulty is not in understanding its meaning, but in formulating any rule for its particular application.

The real difficulty in cases contesting assessments for local improvements, said the court in Sands v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 571, 31 Am. Rep. 742, is not with respect of the power to assess the expense of local improvements upon the property specially benefited thereby, but with respect of the method or basis of apportioning the expense among the property owners adjacent to the improvement.

If, owing to extraordinary facts, the presumption of benefit from a street improvement to property assessed to defray the cost thereof is overthrown, and it appears that the assessment amounts to a confiscation of the assessed property without compensation, the courts will not permit the spoliation to be carried through. Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115.

If municipal authorities, in assessing property for a local improvement, assess lots shown beyond all question not to be benefited by the improvement, so that the assessment could not be a matter of judgment or difference of opinion, the inevitable inference is that they acted either under a mistake of fact or fraudulently or upon an illegal principle of assessment, and the assessment will be vitiated. State ex rel. Powell v. District Ct. 47 Minn. 406, 50 N. W. 476.

When property is not and cannot be benefited by the opening of a street to the extent of the amount assessed upon it, it is the duty of the court to send back their report to the commissioners for opening the street until property can be found sufficiently benefited to defray the expense of the improvement, or until the proceedings shall be discontinued. Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 618.

While the statutes of New York (Laws, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

1901, chap. 466, §§ 980 et seq.; Laws 1905, chap. 299; Laws 1906, chap. 638) make it the duty of commissioners for a street opening to determine in the first instance whether property upon which an assessment for benefits is to be made will be enhanced in value, and if so, to what extent, their determination is not conclusive, and, when brought under review by the court, such facts must be presented as will enable the court to see that there is a basis for the assessment made. Re East 136th Street, 127 App. Div. 672, 111 N. Y. Supp. 916.

At best, and by any mode of assessment adopted, it is possible only to approximate the relative benefit from an improvement to each parcel assessed. Allen v. Galveston, 51 Tex. 302.

The market value of assessed property after a street improvement, as compared with its previous value, does not of itself determine whether it has or has not been benefited by the improvement. McMaken v. Hayes, 10 Ohio C. C. N. S. 38.

The rule in Kentucky is that, while assessments for street improvements rest upon the basis of benefits or presumed benefits to the property assessed, it is not essential to their validity that actual enhancement in value or other benefits to each owner should be shown. Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 78 Ky. 357; Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115.

One of the points made in Whiting v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 515, against a judgment enforcing an assessment for plankton a street was that the exclusion of offered evidence that the assessed lot had not been increased in value by the work done upon the street was prejudicial error. We are not aware, replied the court, of any principle of law upon which such evidence could have been considered by the court, and in our opinion the authorities referred to by the learned counsel for the appellant fail to establish the proposition contended for by him. The act provided that the expenses incurred by the work should be assessed upon the lots fronting thereon in proportion to frontage at a rate the foot sufficient in the whole to cover the total expense of the work. This is perhaps the most uniform and the least objectionable mode of assessing the property that could be adopted, and the provisions of the statute have been carried out and enforced in cases too numerous to mention.

The validity of a special tax or assessment for a local improvement in a city is not to be tested by individual benefits to specific taxpayers or their property, but by the general purpose of the law under which it is imposed, and the relative ratio of the tax exacted to the value of the property upon which it is levied. Rich v. Woods, 118 Ky. 865, 82 S. W. 578.

An assessment for the cost of plankton a street laid upon the abutting lots, each being separately assessed in proportion to its frontage, at such a rate the foot as in the aggregate will defray the total expense of the work, is valid, fair, uniform, and unobjectionable, regardless of whether any particular piece of the assessed property is or is not benefited. Whiting v. Townsend, supra; Jennings v. Le Breton, 80 Cal. 8, 21 Pac. 1127.

While special assessments, as distinguished from general taxation, rest upon the idea of equivalents,—a compensation proportional to the special benefits derived from the improvement to pay for which they are laid,—it does not follow that there must be in fact such full equivalent in every instance, or that its absence will invalidate the assessment. Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159.

The test of the fairness, justice, or reasonableness of a municipal ordinance imposing a special tax for the construction of a sidewalk, proportioned according to frontage, is in no case the exact equality between burden and benefit. Job v. Alton, 189 Ill. 256, 82 Am. St. Rep. 448, 59 N. E. 622.

It is not necessary to the legality and constitutionality of a municipal ordinance assessing the cost of a local street improvement upon abutting property, that such property should be benefited in every possible respect or directly or immediately benefited. Kelly v. Chadwick, 104 La. 719, 29 So. 295, affirmed in 187 U. S. 540, 47 L. ed. 293, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175.

Abutting property assessed for the cost of a sewer cannot escape the burden, upon the ground that the sewer conferred no real benefit upon it. Connor v. Cincinnati, 5 Ohio C. D. 199.

A landowner assessed for the cost of a sewer in front of his property cannot evade the payment of the assessment, upon the ground that the sewer was neither a private benefit to him or his property nor necessary to the public. Michener v. Philadelphia, 118 Pa. 535, 12 Atl. 174; Harrisburg v. McCormick, 129 Pa. 213, 18 Atl. 126.

The real question in assessing abutting property for a street improvement is not whether it is actually benefited by such improvement, but whether there are no potential benefits to accrue. McMaken v. Hayes, supra.

A parcel of land derives special benefit from a sewer, whether main or lateral, when it is so situated that connection may be made with such sewer and it can be used as a drain for such parcel, or, in other words, it is the opportunity presented for use which determines the question of special benefit from the construction of a sewer. Bennett v. Emmetsburg, 138 Iowa, 67, 115 N. W. 582.

Assuming that an assessment can ever be impeached by parol evidence merely showing that the property received no benefit in fact, still that fact is not to be determined with reference merely to the particular use to which the owner is devoting the property. State ex rel. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. v. District Ct. 68 Minn. 242, 71 N. W. 27.

Abutting property cannot be relieved from the burden of a street assessment simply because its owner has seen fit to devote it to a use which may not be specially benefited by the local improvement. The benefit is presumed to inure, not to such present use, but to the property itself. Northern P. R. Co. v. Seattle, 46 Wash. 674, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 121, 123 Am. St. Rep. 955, 91 Pac. 244.
28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

When a landowner seeks to enjoin the enforcement of an assessment upon his land for the construction of a sewer, he assumes the burden of establishing conclusively that no possible benefit from such sewer does or can result to his land. His failure to adduce evidence to establish an utter want of benefit to such land from the improvement is fatal to his success. Coates v. Nugent, 76 Kan. 556, 92 Pac. 597.

The circumstance that property assessed for the cost of a street improvement is a railroad right of way which is vacant and unimproved, and is not and cannot be in anywise benefited, does not vitiate the assessment, notwithstanding it is laid in proportion to frontage. Northern P. R. Co. v. Seattle, supra.

A railroad right of way used for railroad purposes is subject to a special assessment for a local improvement, and it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that it derives no special or particular benefit from such improvement. Heman Constr. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 206 Mo. 172, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 104 S. W. 67, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 630.

If it were true that the property of a railroad company was not, and in the nature of things could not be, benefited at all by a local street improvement, that fact, in and of itself, would not necessarily render the assessment of the property of such company invalid and void. Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, supra.

Land owned by a railroad corporation not required nor used for railroad purposes is subject to assessment for street improvements, and land used for railroad purposes and specially exempted from taxation is not thereby exempt from local assessment, but land used for railroad purposes and exempt from taxation cannot be assessed for a local improvement, which is required to be assessed only upon, and not in excess of, the special benefits conferred by the improvement for which the assessment is laid. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 506, 28 L.R.A. 249, 62 N. W. 417.

It is the benefit offered by a water main in a city street to abutting property, and not the actual use of the water upon such property, that affords ground for assessing it to pay the cost of laying a water main in the street. Batterman v. New York, 65 App. Div. 576, 73 N. Y. Supp. 44.

The mere fact that property along the line of a city street in which a water main is laid does not use the water does not entitle the landowner to have an annual assessment on his land, laid on account of it, adjudged unreasonable and void. Richmond & A. R. Co. v. Lynchburg, 81 Va. 473.

An ordinance directing the laying of a water main in a public street, and assessing the expense thereof on the abutting property, is not so unreasonable that the courts can declare it void merely because the assessed property is vacant land. Myers v. Chicago, 196 Ill. 591, 63 N. E. 1037.

A city is not entitled to a lien upon rural property for the cost of laying a water conduit that is not a service pipe for such property, but a trunk main to carry a supply of water to another section of the city. Crawford's Estate, 14 Phila. 323.

Inasmuch as it is essential to the validity of an assessment that it be limited to the actual peculiar benefits which the property burdened by it receives from the work on account of which the assessment is made, a tax for water service or rent upon a vacant lot is invalid. State, Vreeland, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 43 N. J. L. 135, affirmed in 43 N. J. L. 638.

A statute directing assessors to assess a proportionate part of the cost of a local improvement upon "property adjoining and to be specially benefited" means no more than a designation of the assessable property. It does not mean that adjoining property is to be assessed provided and only when it is specially benefited. United States ex rel. Henderson v. Edmunds, 3 Mackey, 142.

In Stevens v. Port Huron, 149 Mich. 536, 113 N. W. 291, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 603, the power of the municipality to levy a special assessment upon city lots for the cost of sprinkling the street in front of them was denied, but the court was divided upon the ground of its invalidity. A majority of the court were of the opinion that street sprinkling confers no substantial or permanent benefit upon the abutting property, another member of the court was of the opinion that the city charter did not authorize special assessments to be laid by the front-foot rule without any hearing as to benefits, and two of the judges dissented.

XIV. The front-foot rule in the abstract.

The front-foot rule is really a labor-saving device of assessors. It does not express a principle of taxation, but merely a convenient method of imposing a tax. Witman v. Reading, 169 Pa. 375, 32 Atl. 576; Scranton v. Koehler, 200 Pa. 126, 49 Atl. 792.

Its use has been repeatedly declared by the courts to be valid and to be open per se to no constitutional objections. Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 638, 37 So. 291; Motz v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495; Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39, 2 Am. Rep. 76; State ex rel. Stateler v. Reis, 38 Minn. 371, 38 N. W. 97; Edwards House Co. v. Jackson, 91 Miss. 429, 45 So. 14; Neenan v. Smith, 60 Mo. 292; Rutherford v. Hamilton, 97 Mo. 543, 11 S. W. 249; Thale v. Cincinnati, 3 Ohio Dec. 131; Norfolk City v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. 224.
28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And its employment is neither unequal nor unreasonable. Covington v. Worthington, 88 Ky. 206, 10 S. W. 790, 11 S. W. 1038; Magee v. Com. 46 Pa. 358; Wray v. Pittsburgh, 46 Pa. 365.

The front-foot rule of assessment furnishes not infrequently as fair an expression of the proportionate benefits received by the construction of a sewer as any other process. Bassett v. New Haven, 76 Conn. 70, 55 Atl. 579.

And yet the foot-frontage rule is the imposition of a tax upon special lands without any reference to benefits conferred upon such land, and as a mode of assessment it is purely arbitrary. Re Klock, 30 App. Div. 24, 51 N. Y. Supp. 897.

The front-foot rule has been much criticized. The best statement of the objections to its use is probably that of Carpenter, J., in the opinion of the court in Clapp v. Hartford, 35 Conn. 66. The rule, said he, ought not to receive the sanction of this court unless it appears to be fair and reasonable. Let us examine the rule and see whether it is reasonable in its operation. It disregards entirely the quantity of land affected. Two lots with equal fronts, the one containing double the number of square feet contained in the other, are benefited in different degrees. The rule taxes them alike. This is not in proportion to the benefit received. We think it reasonable that the quantity should be considered. The rule ignores the value of the lands benefited. Two different lots with the same length of front may differ greatly in value, owing to a difference in location or other causes, and hence be benefited in different degrees. Yet an arbitrary rule like this taxes both alike. We cannot sanction a rule which excludes the value of the property in estimating the tax to be assessed. The rule also excludes from consideration any and all peculiar circumstances which modify the amount of benefit received. One man owns a piece of land extending from one street to another. A sewer in one street sufficiently drains his whole premises. Another sewer is constructed in the other street, from which he derives little or no benefit. This rule imposes the same burden upon him that it does upon an adjoining proprietor, to whom the new sewer is indispensable. It seems to us quite clear that all the circumstances tending either to enhance or diminish the benefit received must be taken into consideration.

While it is undeniable that a method of assessing the cost of a local improvement upon abutting property in proportion to each linear front foot is one not proportioned either to the benefits received or to the value of the estates assessed, but rests upon a purely mathematical computation of frontage, is unequal and may in many instances be unfair, this, in and of itself, does not warrant the conclusion that a statute authorizing the adoption of such a mode is unconstitutional. Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50.

But, notwithstanding the front-foot rule is an arbitrary formula, and the principles stated ubi supra appear to be disregarded when it is employed, nevertheless, the courts have acquiesced so long in its use that they refuse longer to listen to attacks upon it standing alone.

An objection urged in Jennings v. Le Breton, 80 Cal. 8, 21 Pac. 1127, was that the assessment under review had not been levied in proportion to benefits, and hence was beyond the constitutional power of the state and municipal governments. The learned counsel for the appellants, said the court, has submitted an able argument upon this point, evincing thorough research and critical examination of all the leading cases and text writers upon this much debated question; but it comes to this court too late. . . . The objection is that the mode of apportionment, viz., in proportion to frontage on the improvement, . . . is unequal, and not in proportion to benefits, and therefore, unconstitutional. Twenty-four years ago these questions were deliberately considered by this court and decided against the views of the learned counsel for the appellants, in Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co. 28 Cal. 345, in which it was decided that the legislature may delegate to municipal corporations authority to assess real property to pay the expenses of local improvements, and to apportion the assessment in proportion to the frontage of the land assessed on the improvements; and that this is a constitutional mode of the exercise by the legislature of the sovereign right of taxation, which does not in any degree depend upon the right of eminent domain, nor involve the taking of private property for public use in the sense of the constitutional prohibition. We are not aware that any of these propositions have been overruled or qualified, but understand that they have been repeatedly affirmed. . . . We are therefore not at liberty to accede to the earnest and respectful request of the learned counsel for appellants to open and reconsider these questions.

In reaffirming the constitutional validity, under the present Constitution of Illinois, of an assessment for a local improvement apportioned according to frontage, Chief Justice Mulkey, who wrote for the court, said in Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 269, 11 N. E. 261: If this were a new question, the writer, and perhaps other members of the court, would take the view of appellees. But it is not. If it be possible to settle any question by repeated decisions all the same way, the present one surely ought to be regarded as finally and irrevocably settled.

The constitutionality of the front-foot rule of apportionment of local assessments being once more denied in Wilbur v. Springfield, 123 Ill. 395, 14 N. E. 871, the court disposed of the question on the ground of stare decisis. Had the able and exhaustive argument of counsel, it was said in the opinion, not been pressed before upon the attention of this court, and met, as it must 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

be again, by the fact that this court in numerous cases has settled the doctrine adversely to the contention of counsel, we should feel called upon to give it greater consideration than we can now do. No further discussion of this contention, however inviting it may be, would be profitable in view of these repeated decisions.

It is contended, said the court in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, 153 Ill. 649, 39 N. E. 1077, that an ordinance requiring the cost of improving a street to be assessed upon the abutting real estate in proportion to the frontage of the several parcels of land is obnoxious, if not to the letter, at least to the spirit, of the Constitution, and consequently void. This question has been repeatedly passed upon adversely to this contention.

The front-foot rule of assessment was challenged as unconstitutional because assessments under it were not limited to the benefits conferred, in Allen v. Davenport, 107 Iowa, 90, 77 N. W. 532, but the court replied: "We have heretofore approved of what is known as the 'front-foot rule of assessment,' and have also said that the expense of improving streets has been too long imposed upon abutting property without regard to benefits, to be now called in question." Deemer, Ch. J., however, who delivered the opinion of the court, added, on his own account, it may not be out of place to say that if the proposition were an original one, the writer, and perhaps other members of the court as now constituted, would be strongly inclined to the view that such assessments can only be justified on the theory of benefits conferred, and that when there is no benefit, as when the property is taken and a balance yet remains, such balance cannot be collected from the property owner. The proposition seems to be closed, however, and it is better perhaps that it be not disturbed.

Again in Hackworth v. Ottumwa, 114 Iowa, 467, 87 N. W. 424, the constitutionality of the statutes prescribing assessments under the front-foot rule was assailed. The validity of these statutes, said the court, has been questioned many times in this court, but we have uniformly held that there is nothing in them which runs counter to the provisions of our fundamental law. In view of these decisions, nothing is to be gained from further discussion, as none of us is prepared to overrule them.

In Ft. Dodge Electric Light & P. Co. v. Ft. Dodge, 115 Iowa, 568, 89 N. W. 7, the validity of the entire contract in that case was assailed on the ground that the legislation on which it was based was unconstitutional because it authorized an assessment in accordance with the front-foot rule without regard to benefits. This question, said the court, has recently been discussed, and this court is committed to the doctrine that our statutory method of making such assessments is constitutional. It is not necessary to review the question here.

Methods of assessment by the foot, said the court in Louisville v. Bitzer, 115 Ky. 359, 61 L.R.A. 434, 73 S. W. 1115, have been followed so long, and have been so often approved by this court, that it no longer remains an open question.

In the case of Smith v. Worcester, 182 Mass. 232, 59 L.R.A. 728, 65 N. E. 40, the court, according to Holmes, Ch. J., was asked to declare the statute unconstitutional on the ground that the assessment which it purports to authorize may exceed the benefit to the estate assessed, and therefore is bad under the recent decisions. It is admitted, said the chief justice, that the statute has been before the court repeatedly, and has been upheld after argument as to its validity, but it is said that the rule of the recent cases was not understood at the time of these decisions, and that they are no longer authority so far as the present question is concerned. It would be a misfortune, he continued, if we were driven to the conclusion contended for, after the act has stood so long under the shelter of an express decision, and after, as we may presume, very great and costly improvements have been made and probably titles passed in reliance upon the authority which the statutes purport to confer. It is only justice to require an argument from which there is no possible escape before we accept such a result, but we do not suppose the recent decisions of this court to have made such slaughter among the older cases as the petitioner's counsel is inclined to believe. We are of the opinion that the act may be sustained.

It has several times been decided in Michigan, according to the court in Shelley v. Detroit, 45 Mich. 431, 8 N. W. 52, that it was competent, under legislation permitting it, to apportion local assessments according to frontage. We might fill pages, said Cooley, J., in delivering the opinion, with the names of cases decided in other states which have sustained assessments for improving streets, though the apportionment of the cost was made on the same basis as the one before us. If anything can be regarded as settled in municipal law in this country, the power of the legislature to permit such assessments, and to direct an apportionment of the cost by frontage, should by this time be considered as no longer open to controversy. Writers on constitutional law, on municipal law, on the law of taxation, have collected the cases, and have recognized the principle as settled, and if the question were new in this city, we might think it important to refer to what they say. But the question is not new. It was settled for us thirty years ago.

The question of the right to pave certain streets and to assess abutting property for the cost thereof according to the street frontage was again declared to be settled in Michigan, in the case of Kalamazoo v. Francoise, 115 Mich. 554, 73 N. W. 801.

In street paving cases, according to the court in Cass Farm Co. v. Detroit, 124 Mich. 433, 83 N. W. 108, the rule has been settled in Michigan by many decisions, that 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) it is competent for the legislature to authorize the cost of paving streets to be assessed upon the abutting property according to frontage.

According to Norton, J., in the opinion of the court in Farrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 379, the liability of lots fronting on a street, the paving of which is authorized, to be charged with the cost of the work according to their frontage, having been so repeatedly asserted, the question is no longer an open one in the state of Missouri, and there is no necessity to examine authorities condemning what is familiarly known as the "front-foot rule."

It is no longer an open question in this state, declared the court again in Rutherford v. Hamilton, 97 Mo. 543, 11 S. W. 249, whether the assessment of the cost of a sewer upon the property fronting thereon, apportioned in proportion to the frontage on each lot, without considering the amount of actual benefits conferred by the sewer on the lot owners, is a method constitutionally applicable to such subjects. In many well-considered cases it has been held that such charge may, by valid laws or authorized ordinances, be levied upon the abutting property having the benefit of the improvement, in proportion to its frontage thereon, as well as by any other approved method.

In Moberly v. Hogan, 131 Mo. 19, 32 S. W. 1014, it was argued by the complaining property owner that the front-foot rule of assessment did not properly apply to the side of his lot as it had been assessed. This, said the court in reply, is an old subject on which the law is settled to the effect that where the side of a lot abuts upon the improvement, the lot is properly assessable therefor according to that frontage. Where the language of the law is in substance as it is here, it is unnecessary to go over the argument of the subject now.

The constitutionality of provisions in municipal charters providing for the construction of streets, alleys, or sewers, and the assessing of the cost of such construction proportionately upon all property abutting the improvement or within the established benefit district, either according to the front-foot rule or according to the area rule, declared the court in Prior v. Buehler & C. Constr. Co. 170 Mo. 439, 71 S. W. 205, is no longer open to debate.

In Heman v. Gilliam, 171 Mo. 258, 71 S. W. 163, it was again contended that an assessment for the cost of paving an alley, laid upon the abutting property according to the front-foot rule, violated the Federal and state Constitutions; but as to this the court deemed it only necessary to say that the constitutionality of this method of assessing benefits for an improvement against abutting property is no longer an open question.

One of the defenses set up in St. Charles ex rel. Budd v. Deemar, 174 Mo. 122, 73 S. W. 469, was that a tax was null and void because the statute by the authority of which it was imposed, and which provided for the apportionment of the cost of the improvement for which it was imposed by the front-foot rule, was unconstitutional. That this defense is untenable is now finally and conclusively settled, and no more cases ought to be brought here questioning the constitutionality of this method of assessing the cost of such improvements.

In Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Munn, 185 Mo. 552, 83 S. W. 1002, an assessment for the cost of street paving to be kept in condition by the contractor for five years was challenged as void, because made under a provision in the municipal charter apportioning the burden against abutting lands according to the front-foot rule. That provision in the charter, said the court, was carefully considered and held to be constitutional in Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. French, 158 Mo. 534, 54 L.R.A. 492, 58 S. W. 934, and reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the same case (181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625), and we must decline further to consider that question.

The cases of Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289, and Ernst v. Kukle, 5 Ohio St. 520, were both cited in Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159, and declared to establish the proposition that a special assessment for a local public improvement may be made upon abutting property in proportion to the feet front as well as ad valorem, and to establish the proposition that an assessment in proportion to the feet front is not unconstitutional. It was added that the two cases cited were reconsidered and affirmed in Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333, and other cases.

It is well settled, said the court in Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551, that assessments for street improvements apportioned by frontage, when properly made by municipal corporations, are constitutional. This is the first case in this court in which the assessment was made on the principle of special benefits without reference to frontage.

Of an act of the legislature of the state of Pennsylvania empowering the city of Allegheny to pave and grade its streets, and, for the purpose of defraying the cost and expenses of so doing, levying a special tax to be equally assessed upon the property abutting on the improved streets in proportion to the feet front, the court, in Schenley v. Allegheny, 25 Pa. 123, said the legislation complained of here is of the character of much that has prevailed in Pennsylvania without complaint, which has been often sanctioned by judicial tribunals, and which is made indispensable by the growth and prosperity of towns and cities. It is a fair and legitimate mode of taxation, because it imposes the burdens exactly where the benefits are conferred, and its constitutionality is unquestionable.

Whatever doubt might have been originally entertained of an assessment according to the frontage of property on a public street 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

to pay for its opening, grading, and paving, as a substitute for an actual assessment by jurors or assessors under oath, it has been, said the court in Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255, so often sanctioned by decision, it would ill become us now to unsettle its foundation by disputing its principle.

It is settled beyond all question, said the court in the Parker's Appeal, 163 Pa. 433, 32 Atl. 574, by a line of cases of which it is only necessary to mention Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 3 Am. Rep. 615, and Re Washington Ave. supra, that local assessments are special and individual taxation, sustainable only on the basis of special and individual benefit, and the limit of the benefit is the limit of the taxing power.

The right to adopt the front-foot rule of assessing the cost of street paving in Pennsylvania, declared the court in Harrisburg v. McPherran, 200 Pa. 343, 40 Atl. 988, must be regarded as definitely settled.

After referring to an objection that a local assessment for the cost of a local improvement conferring special benefits on the property assessed was in conflict with a constitutional provision requiring equality and uniformity of taxation, and the collection of taxes under general laws, the court, in Greensburg v. Laird, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 608, said we do not consider the liens authorized by the statute come under the band of a constitutional provision requiring uniformity. We will not tarry to argue this objection for it is settled by authority.

In Whittaker v. Deadwood (S. D.) 122 N. W. 590, the front-foot rule for computing the amount of the special assessment there involved was attacked as unequal and unjust. The court, however, disposed of this objection by simply saying the front-foot rule is established by the statute of this state (Rev. Pol. Code, § 204), and the following of any other rule of computation would be invalid. The constitutionality of the front-foot rule has been many times assailed in other jurisdictions, and the great weight of authority seems to be in favor of its validity. The identical statute exists in North Dakota, and was assailed in Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N. W. 242, and again in Webster v. Fargo, 9 N. D. 208, 56 L.R.A. 156, 82 N. W. 732, and by able opinions held constitutional.

The validity and constitutionality of special assessments for local improvements, according to the court in Sands v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 571, 31 Am. Rep. 742, are sustained by an array of authority and force of reasoning which ought to be decisive of the question.

It must be held to be a settled principle in this state, said the court in Davis v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 861, 6 S. E. 230, that assessments by the front-foot rule of lots adjacent to a street to be improved, for the cost of the improvement, when made under the authority of public law, are valid and binding, and whatever remedy is to be applied, if any, must come from the lawmaking power, and not from the courts.

XV. Squaring the front-foot rule with the rule of benefits.

The efforts, not to say struggles, of the courts, to escape nullifying assessments imposed by the arbitrary rule of frontage, and to reconcile the use of that rule with the doctrine of equivalent benefits, have been numerous and long continued. They have developed a general theory of consistency which has been made to fit a majority of the cases.

The courts, it was said in Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50, have sustained assessments by the front-foot rule generally upon two grounds: First, that they are a species of taxation, and the power to tax cannot be limited by judicial construction except where it clearly violates the Constitution; and, secondly, that such assessments, although theoretically more unequal than assessments in the ratio of benefits received or than ad valorem, assessments, are nevertheless, in practical operation, a fair substitute for either of them in compact parts of large towns or cities.

After, stating such grounds, the court in that case confessed that the reasons were not entirely convincing, but, reinforced as they were by many precedents, they were sufficient to prevent the courts from nullifying an unconstitutional assessment by the front-foot rule.

Assessment by the front-foot rule has been declared to be but a rule of thumb, resorted to for measuring special benefits upon which the whole right to assess rests. Fridman v. Norwood, 25 Ohio C. C. 258.

An assessment according to the front-foot rule is merely a substitute for an actual assessment according to benefits. Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. 300, 22 Am. Rep. 760.

While assessments of special taxes according to an estimate of the particular benefits to each lot assessed, conformably to a measurement of the amount of frontage upon a street or sewer, or the measurement of the area of the lots, or according to a valuation of the property, have all been sustained, the only ground upon which they can properly rest is that they are methods reasonably determined upon for the purpose of ascertaining the benefits actually received by the different states upon which the assessments are to be laid. Sears v. Boston, 173 Mass. 71, 43 L.R.A. 834, 53 N. E. 138.

When the assessors for the cost of a local improvement in a municipality are required by statute to assess property upon the basis of the benefits peculiar to it resulting from the improvement, they may, when the situation of all the parcels of property with respect of the improvement which are assessed is substantially the same, be warranted in apportioning the assessment according to the frontage, but the basis of the assessment must still be the benefits peculiar to the property. Fraser v. Pittsburg, 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 103.

The front-foot rule of assessment is not inherently and necessarily vicious, neither is an assessment made by applying it necessarily invalid even though commanded to be made in proportion to benefits conferred upon the property assessed. The front-foot rule is not invariably and inevitably inconsistent with an assessment according to benefits; it may or may not be so in varying circumstances. If benefits are fairly measured by frontage, if the assessment does not exceed such benefits, if it is not unjust, unequal, or unreasonable, the fact that in the given case the front-foot rule was employed in making it affords no ground for vacating the assessment. English v. Arizona, 214 U. S. 359, 53 L. ed. 1030, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Harney v. Benson, 113 Cal. 314, 45 Pac. 687; Bassett v. New Haven, 76 Conn. 70, 55 Atl. 579; Walker v. Aurora, 140 Ill. 402, 29 N. E. 741; Peru v. Bartels, 214 Ill. 515, 73 N. E. 755; East St. Louis v. Illinois C. R. Co. 238 Ill. 296, 87 N. E. 407; Reed v. Cedar Rapids, 137 Iowa, 107, 111 N. W. 1013; O'Connell v. First Parish, 204 Mass. 118, 90 N. E. 580; Beck v. Holland, 29 Mont. 234, 74 Pac. 410; State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227; State, Padney, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 37 N. J. L. 65; State, Simmons, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 42 N. J. L. 524; State, Raymond, Prosecutor, v. Rutherford, 55 N. J. L. 441, 27 Atl. 172; DeWitt v. Elizabeth, 56 N. J. L. 119, 27 Atl. 801; Long Branch Police Sanitary & Improv. Commission v. Dobbins, 61 N. J. L. 659, 40 Atl. 599, reversing 59 N. J. L. 146, 36 Atl. 482; Dooling v. Ocean City, 67 N. J. L. 215, 50 Atl. 621; Donovan v. Oswego, 90 App. Div. 307, 86 N. Y. Supp. 155, reversing, 39 Misc. 291, 79 N. Y. Supp. 562; Schroder v. Overman, 61 Ohio St. 1, 47 L.R.A. 156, 76 Am. St. Rep. 354, 55 N. E. 158; Shoemaker v. Cincinnati, 68 Ohio St. 603, 61 N. E. 1; Queen City Foundry Co. v. Cincinnati, 8 Ohio N. P. 167; Taylor v. Wapakoneta, 26 Ohio C. C. 285; Taylor v. Boyd, 63 Tex. 533; Adams v. Fisher, 63 Tex. 651, and on second appeal, 75 Tex. 657, 6 S. W. 772; Texas Transp. Co. v. Boyd, 67 Tex. 153, 2 S. W. 364; Harrell v. Storrie (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 838; Adams v. Roanoke, 102 Va. 53, 45 S. E. 881; Hayes v. Douglas County, 92 Wis. 429, 31 L.R.A. 213, 53 Am. St. Rep. 926, 65 N. W. 482.

To esteem the frontage principle of assessment as necessarily wrong in all cases is as great an error as to assume it right in all cases. Jersey City v. State, 30 N. J. L. 521.

That the general distribution of an assessment among the parcels of property subjected thereto is in a ratio of their frontage does not raise a presumption that the assessment is necessarily wrong. Kirtland v. Parker, 76 N. J. L. 217, 68 Atl. 913.

An objection that property assessed for a local improvement was assessed according to its frontage is not good unless it is shown that the property does not bear the same ratio to the total benefit conferred by the improvement, as the tax assessed against it bears to the total tax. Beck v. Holland, 29 Mont. 234, 74 Pac. 410.

The mere fact that property in a municipality is assessed according to its frontage for the cost of a local improvement, under a statute which gives the corporation the power to levy such an assessment only in proportion to the benefits upon the property benefited, is not alone conclusive against the validity of the assessment, for it may be possible for property to be really benefited in proportion to its extent along the street. Elma v. Carney, 9 Wash. 466, 37 Pac. 707.

There is no presumption that the front-foot rule of assessment is wrong, for it may be right, and the burden of establishing that it is wrong in any particular case is upon the landowner. Ithaca v. Babcock, 72 App. Div. 260, 76 N. Y. Supp. 49, affirming 36 Misc. 49, 72 N. Y. Supp. 519.

It is to be presumed, when no evidence is adduced to the contrary, that a municipal council in adopting and approving an assessment for the cost of a street improvement, laid upon the abutting property according to its frontage upon the line of the work, considered and determined that the benefits conferred upon the assessed property by the improvement were in proportion to its frontage. Leeds v. Defrees, 157 Ind. 392, 61 N. E. 930.

It will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that property abutting upon a street improvement, which is assessed in proportion to its frontage, was benefited by the improvement to the extent of the assessment. Brown v. Central Bermudez Co. 162 Ind. 452, 69 N. E. 150.

In order for a landowner who complains of an assessment upon his premises for the construction of a sewer in a public way, to establish its invalidity upon the ground that it was apportioned according to frontage, he must affirmatively prove that the assessment exceeded or was disproportionate to the special benefits conferred by the work. O'Connell v. First Parish, supra.

The cost of a street improvement may be apportioned tentatively according to the front-foot rule upon the abutting property on the line of the work, and assessed accordingly, provided due opportunity is given to the property owner to be heard upon the question of special benefits, and for correction of the assessment, if the facts concerning the special benefits are found to warrant such action. Indianapolis v. Holt, 155 Ind. 222, 57 N. E. 966, 988, 1100.

An error in computing the frontage of property assessed for the construction of a sewer upon the basis of the front-foot rule will not affect the validity of the assessment when it appears affirmatively that the sum assessed upon the particular parcel is a fair and equitable share of the cost of the work chargeable to the property. Morse v. Buffalo, 35 Hun, 613.

If a special tax is levied for a local improvement according to frontage, then, although the distribution of burden as between different lots is not on a basis of proportionate shares, the tax is still valid if within the limits of benefits conferred. East St. Louis v. Illinois C. R. Co. 238 Ill. 296, 87 N. E. 407.

An assessment for the cost of a storm sewer upon all the real estate in a special assessment district, in proportion as the area of each parcel in the district is to the area of all the land, save public highways, in such district, is valid when such method approximately results in assessing the several parcels in proportion to the special benefits accruing to them by such sewer. Denver v. Dumars, 33 Colo. 94, 80 Pac. 114.

The foundation of the front-foot rule of assessment is not in uniformity of value, but in uniformity of benefit. Witman v. Reading, 169 Pa. 375, 32 Atl. 576; Scranton v. Koehler, 200 Pa. 126, 49 Atl. 792.

If the physical conditions of property assessed for grading or paving a street are such that the benefits to the different lots are not approximately equal, but vary greatly in amount, then an assessment according to the front-foot plan is necessarily unequal and unjust, and cannot stand. White v. Tacoma, 109 Fed. 32.

A uniform assessment arbitrarily imposed by the lot on all property affected in the same way by a public improvement is void if the advantages to the several lots from the improvement are varied and unequal. State, Frevert, Prosecutor, v. Bayonne, 63 N. J. L. 202, 42 Atl. 773.

An assessment imposed upon abutting property for the cost of constructing a sidewalk in a street, and the grading of the street for the purpose, laid in the proportion of the entire cost of the work which the frontage of the lot assessed bears to the entire frontage upon the line of such work, is invalid and void when the amount of the burden is more than ten times the cost of the improvement in front of the property assessed, and most of the work has been done by the property owner himself; since such a state of facts discloses that the result of the application of the front-foot rule was unnecessarily and inevitably unfair and unequal. State, Simmons, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 42 N. J. L. 524.

When a sewer has been constructed in a strip of private land taken for the purpose, and the cost thereof assessed according to the frontage of the lots on the strip taken, and the assessments are grossly disproportionate to the benefits received by such lots from the construction of the sewer, and the lots assessed vary greatly in shape, size, depth, and value, method of allowing the assessments in such case is unreasonable, unjust, and disproportionate, and a statute which authorizes it to be employed is unconstitutional. Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L.R.A. 642, 51 N. E. 204.

This case was followed in Dexter v. Boston, 176 Mass. 247, 79 Am. St. Rep. 306, 57 N. E. 379; White v. Gove, 183 Mass. 333, 67 N. E. 359; Harwood v. Street Comrs. 183 Mass. 348, 67 N. E. 362.

When it appears upon the face of the record of the proceedings to assess property for the cost of construction of a sewer, that the assessment had been made by the front-foot rule, and is manifestly unjust, unequal, and erroneous, and in no sense proportional to the benefits conferred by the sewer, the assessment should be annulled. People ex rel. Connelly v. Reis, 109 App. Div. 748, 96 N. Y. Supp. 597.

While it may be conceded that lots similarly situated on a street through which a sewer is constructed may, in many instances, be benefited in proportion to their respective frontage upon such street, whether vacant or improved, yet it cannot be supposed that very different classes of property, valuable for many and different purposes, scattered throughout a wide area in which a system of sewers is constructed, and all of which have been assessed at a fixed and equal rate per front foot, have in every instance been equally benefited in proportion to frontage from the construction of the sewer system. Ibid.

An assessment by the front-foot rule for the cost of a local improvement, although laid only upon property actually benefited to some extent by such improvement, will be set aside where the quantum of benefits received by some of the properties assessed is very greatly in excess of that derived by other parcels. People ex rel. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Buffalo, 57 Misc. 17, 107 N. Y. Supp. 281.

While a front-foot rule of assessment required to be made according to the benefits conferred by a local improvement is not necessarily improper when the several parcels assessed are equally benefited, and substantially equal in condition and value, it cannot be sustained when there is great disproportion in value and in the benefits they receive by the improvement. Ibid.

An assessment for a street improvement, imposed upon abutting property without regard to its depth or comparative value before and after the improvement, when the statute requires it to be made according and in proportion to benefits, is invalid. Nulsen v. Cincinnati, 27 Ohio C. C. 383; Kummer v. Cincinnati, 27 Ohio C. C. 683.

An assessment for the cost of a street improvement upon various parcels of land abutting on the street, ad valorem, in disregard of the frontage and depth of the parcels, which necessarily affect the values, and resulting in the burdening of some parcels with a charge several times as much for each foot front as other parcels on the line of the work, is void for inequality. Howell v. Tacoma, 3 Wash. 711, 28 Am. St. Rep. 83, 29 Pac. 447; Griggs v. Tacoma, 3 Wash. 785, 29 Pac. 449.

The moderate variation in the percentage of the different classes of property assessed ad valorem per foot, making the proportion of assessment greater upon the estates of less value per foot, and somewhat less upon those of greater value, does not show the entire scheme to be so unreasonable, or to operate so unjustly, that it can be judicially declared to be fully invalid. Butler v. Worcester, 112 Mass. 541.
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Slight physical differences in the situation and state of parcels of property abutting upon a street, and assessed for the cost of macadamizing it, do not impeach the fairness and equality of an assessment according to the front-foot rule for the cost of the improvement, property being in most respects and substantially all of the same general character. Re Phelps, 110 App. Div. 69, 96 N. Y. Supp. 862.

The mere fact that city lots assessed for the cost of a local improvement in front of them according to the front-foot rule differ somewhat in situation, and in depth, and in the topography of their surfaces, is not in itself patent to invalidate the assessment. McKeesport v. Busch, 166 Pa. 46, 31 Atl. 49.

An assessment for a local improvement, laid upon adjoining property according to the front-foot rule, is not open to the objection of inequality and want of uniformity, when the lots upon which it is laid are substantially of the same width of front, although they may vary greatly in depth. Tripp v. Yankton, 10 S. D. 516, 74 N. W. 447.

Notwithstanding lots assessed along the line of a street pavement according to the front-foot rule, to meet the cost of such pavement, vary considerably in depth, the assessment is not invalid, when each lot is specially benefited to the amount or in excess of its assessment, and when those least in depth are yet deep enough for building purposes and practically are as much benefited as the deeper ones the rear portions of which are benefited only slightly or not at all. Bowditch v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 503.

If it affirmatively appears that city lots of equal frontage upon the line of a sewer, assessed in equal amounts for the cost of such sewer, have received equal benefits from such sewer, the assessment is valid, notwithstanding such lots are unequal in depth. State, Van Solingen, Prosecutor, v. Harrison, 39 N. J. L. 51.

The assessments in controversy in Bacon v. Savannah, 86 Ga. 301, 12 S. E. 580, s. c. on subsequent appeal, 91 Ga. 500, 17 S. E. 749, had been laid according to the front-foot rule of apportionment, and were finally vacated, but upon grounds unrelated to that rule. In the first report, indeed, the court appeared, if not favorable to the rule, at least of the opinion that its adoption and application afforded no reason to invalidate the assessments. The court, in substance and effect, there held that a local assessment for a part of the cost of paving, grading, and otherwise improving a city street, laid upon the abutting property in proportion to its frontage upon the line of the improvement, is valid under a charter authorizing, and a municipal ordinance prescribing, apportionments of such assessments according to the lineal frontage of the assessed property, and without any reference to the depth, superficial area, or estimated value of the several parcels subjected to the burden.

When the assessed property along the line of a local improvement consists of lots substantially equal in depth, and there is nothing in the nature and circumstances of the particular case to indicate that an assessment in proportion to the frontage of the lots will work manifest injustice, such a mode of assessment will be valid. Pueblo v. Robinson, 12 Colo. 593, 21 Pac. 899; approved in Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L.R.A. 135, 30 Pac. 1041.

An assessment upon abutting property according to its frontage, for the cost of opening, grading, guttering, and curbing a street, may well be in proportion to the benefits conferred upon the property, as every landowner upon the line of the street may be equally benefited by the improvements. State, Pudney, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 37 N. J. L. 65.

The foot-frontage rule of assessment for local improvements may be the most just and equitable of any that can be adopted in certain cases, but that is true only where the property has been platted into lots of equal depth, and where all are unimproved or improved alike, and where all can derive equal advantages from the improvement. Re Klock, 30 App. Div. 24, 51 N. Y. Supp. 897.

An assessment by the front-foot rule is permissible only as a convenient approximation where the assessed property is all substantially of the defined kind, and does not differ very much in the value of the parcels. Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. 360, 22 Am. Rep. 760.

To measure the front of all abutting properties along the line of a street or highway improvement, and divide the cost of making such improvement by an equal charge per front foot upon each parcel, is not an assessment of advantages, but simply an arbitrary impost. Therefore, to be just and equally fair to each landowner, all such owners must stand in like or in reasonably equal circumstances; otherwise the burden is an exaction, and not a fair assessment. Ibid.

While the frontage rule of assessment may be conceded to be a legal mode of apportioning the burden of a public improvement upon property thereby benefited, when such property is substantially alike in situation, size, and value, it cannot be used as an arbitrary mode of casting public burden upon the property of individuals. Ibid.

The system of assessment by the front-foot rule is only sustained on the ground that in cities and large towns, where population is dense and lots are small, it affords a fairly approximate and just measure of the benefits conferred upon the property assessed by the improvement for which the charge is made. McKeesport v. Soles, 165 Pa. 628, 30 Atl. 1019.

Benefit to property from an improvement to pay for which it is assessed is not always, perhaps not even generally, dependent upon value or in any fixed ratio to it. Properties in the same general situation are presumed to get the same general benefit from a common improvement, and, as this benefit is assessed exclusively on property abutting on the line of the improvement, it is presumed to be measured fairly by the foot frontage of the property on that line, although values may be and usually are various, depending on other circumstances, such as the depth of the lots, buildings erected on them, use to which they are put, and their proximity to business centers. Witman v. Reading, 169 Pa. 375, 32 Atl. 576; Scranton v. Koehler, 200 Pa. 126, 49 Atl. 792.

Upon reason and principles of natural justice, said the court in Norfolk City v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. 224, an assessment for grading and paving a city street upon abutting lots in proportion to foot frontage may be sustained as an apportionment of the burden according to the benefit, as nearly, perhaps, as any other method that can be adopted. That it may in some instances operate harshly, and even oppressively, is conceded; but this is true of all forms of taxation.

As a rule property along the line of a street improvement will be equally benefited by the improvement, and will be foot by foot of equal value, and therefore may be equally assessed according to frontage, under a Constitution requiring equality and uniformity in the rate of assessment and taxation. Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 339.

When a street is graded or paved, the improvement is generally actually beneficial to the property abutting upon it, and the benefit is permanent, so that the owner cannot well say that the cost of the improvement, distributed according to the per front-foot plan, exceeds the benefits. White v. Tacoma, 109 Fed. 32.

When an improvement is a permanent one, equally useful to every portion of the abutting property, the assessment of the cost thereof by the foot-frontage rule is a fair and equitable method of apportionment. Ithaca v. Babcock, 72 App. Div. 260, 76 N. Y. Supp. 49, affirming 36 Misc. 49, 72 N. Y. Supp. 519.

If the general conditions and the benefits that apply to all the property fronting upon a street improvement are substantially the same, the result of an assessment made in proportion to the benefits is necessarily the same as if it were made under the front-foot rule. Hedge v. Des Moines, 141 Iowa, 4, 119 N. W. 276.

Parcels of property assessed for the cost of constructing a village sewer, which do not substantially differ in depth, value, and situation, may, if the assessing officers so determine, lawfully be assessed according to the front-foot rule for the cost of constructing such sewer, upon the theory that each parcel is equally benefited by the work. Dennis v. Fairport, 11 Misc. 199, 32 N. Y. Supp. 97.

Where lots are substantially alike, except as to the number of lineal feet fronting upon the street improved, with practically the same facilities for enjoying the improvement, and where each is unimproved or improved substantially alike, the foot frontage upon the street may measure the benefits derived by each owner from its improvement; but, unless such is the case, an assessment by the front-foot rule will not be valid where the statute is mandatory in directing it to be made in proportion to benefits. Re Klock, supra.

Assessing officers commanded to assess the cost of a local improvement upon property benefited thereby, and in proportion to the amount of benefits derived from such improvement, are permitted to adopt the front-foot rule of assessment, where the several parcels of property assessed are substantially uniform in value and are each equally benefited by the improvement. Re Wheeler, 39 Misc. 484, 80 N. Y. Supp. 204.

The front-foot rule of assessment for sprinkling a city street will be sustained when it is not established that, in its application to the property assessed, it is not an approximately accurate method of determining benefits conferred upon the property charged. Sears v. Boston, 173 Mass. 71, 43 L.R.A. 834, 53 N. E. 138.

Every owner of property situated on a street where improvements are made derives peculiar benefits from such improvements in front of his property, distinct from that enjoyed in common by the community; and when a tax applies equally upon all property of the description assessed, there is no valid objection to it, especially under a Constitution which does not require taxes to be assessed ad valorem, nor restrict in any wise the legislative power to levy specific taxes. Smith v. Aberdeen, 25 Miss. 458.

The weight of authority, according to the Massachusetts supreme court, is that an assessment according to the frontage of lots abutting upon a street or public way in a city sometimes may be a reasonable mode of assessing the cost of constructing a sewer in such street or way, because of the similarity of the lots. Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L.R.A. 642, 51 N. E. 204; O'Connell v. First Parish, 204 Mass. 118, 90 N. E. 580.

The special and peculiar benefits to abutting property afforded by a water main in a city street, for which an assessment is laid, may properly be measured by frontage. Batterman v. New York, 65 App. Div. 576, 73 N. Y. Supp. 44.

While assessments for the cost of local improvements laid upon the property thereby benefited must be apportioned fairly and equitably, and in proportion to the benefits conferred, an apportionment according to the front-foot rule is not necessarily objectionable, if the conditions are such that the benefits conferred are substantially the same with respect of all the property assessed to pay for the work. Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L.R.A. 330, 14 S. E. 521; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 140 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069.

The front-foot rule of assessing the cost of street paving is not to be considered as 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) an assessment irrespective of benefits conferred, when it is applied to the paving of a street in the built-up part of a city. Harrisburg v. McPherran, 200 Pa. 343, 49 Atl. 988.

An assessment on abutting property which is urban and uniform in character, for improving or paving for the first time a city street, by the front-foot rule, is valid. Franklin v. Hancock, 204 Pa. 110, 53 Atl. 644.

Property in a city or other densely populated country may with propriety be assessed for the cost of a local improvement according to the front-foot rule, as an approximation to the measure of benefits conferred by the improvement. Anderson v. Lower Merion Twp. 217 Pa. 369, 66 Atl. 1115.

The frontage mode of equal assessment according to the front foot upon city property, for the cost of a street pavement, is a reasonable exercise of the taxing power according to the benefits received. Shoemaker v. Harrisburg, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 86.

The front-foot rule of assessment for the cost of paving, grading, or otherwise improving a street or highway, may be applied in cities and large towns, where the density of population along the way and the small size of the lots make it a reasonable approximate method of estimating the benefits. Wilson v. Allegheny, 25 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 15.

An assessment for paving and curbing a street in Philadelphia, except where the assessed property is rural land, is to be apportioned according to frontage. Stewart v. Philadelphia, 3 Sadler (Pa.) 137, 7 Atl. 192; Allentown v. Adams, 5 Sadler (Pa.) 253, 8 Atl. 430.

The front-foot rule of assessment for local improvement, said the court in Greensburg v. Laird, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 608, in the built-up portion of cities and large towns, has been recognized in a beadroll of cases, and for us to decide against it would be to defy stare decisis.

Where the parcels of land in a town or city are small, of uniform depth, and similarly situated, an assessment upon them of the cost of a local improvement, on the basis of frontage, may be a convenient substitute for an estimate of the benefits conferred, and not result in injustice or inequality of burden, and therefore be valid. King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 55 L.R.A. 812, 63 Pac. 2.

An assessment of damages and of corresponding benefits consequent on a widening of a street in a residential section of a city, for the purpose of making a park way along its sides, made upon the front-foot rule of apportionment, where there are no substantial differences in the values and uses of the property abutting on the street, is valid and prima facie fair and equitable. Re Clinton Ave. 106 App. Div. 31, 94 N. Y. Supp. 146.

The fairness of the rule of charging benefits by frontage is apparent as a practical adjustment of proportional benefits, when it is applied to cities and large towns, where the density of population along the streets and the small size of the lots make it a reasonable mode of arriving at a just result. Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255.

The Michigan courts, in deciding that assessments for paving may constitutionally be made in proportion to the frontage of the lots along the improvement, rest upon the idea that underlies statutes enacted for this purpose, that the benefits to the abutting lots are generally proportioned to the length of their respective fronts, and that commonly this principle of apportionment is more just than any other. Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155, 24 Am. Rep. 535; Sheley v. Detroit, 45 Mich. 431, 8 N. W. 52.

That an assessment for a street improvement was in point of fact laid upon the abutting property according to frontage does not establish that it was made arbitrarily, and not in accordance with resulting benefits. Brown v. Central Bermudez Co. 162 Ind. 452, 69 N. E. 150.

When the front-foot rule of apportionment does not work inequality, its adoption, of itself, affords no sufficient ground for vacating an assessment. State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227.

An assessment which is in fact apportioned according to the benefits received by the improvement for which it is made, upon the lots assessed, is not vitiated by being also apportioned according to frontage. State, Van Solingen, Prosecutor, v. Harrison, 39 N. J. L. 51.

The mere fact that an assessment for an improvement in a city for paving a street, and constructing water, gas, and sewer connections, was apportioned among the abutting owners according to the lineal foot frontage of their several lots, does not establish that the method chosen to make the apportionment was erroneous. Donovan v. Oswego, 90 App. Div. 397, 86 N. Y. Supp. 155.

A municipal ordinance directing cost of a street improvement to be assessed per lineal foot against the abutting real estate does not prevent the assessment being made according to resulting benefits. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tabor, 168 Ind. 419, 77 N. E. 740, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 808.

If property assessed for the cost of a local improvement is in fact benefited by such improvement, and the assessment laid upon it is not shown to be unfair, inequitable, or unjust, or grossly disproportioned to the benefits received by the assessed property from the improvement, then the mere fact that it was laid in accordance with the front-foot rule, without any direct or explicit consideration of the question of benefits, will not invalidate it. Schroder v. Overman, 61 Ohio St. 1, 47 L.R.A. 156, 55 N. E. 158.

An assessment for a street improvement made by the front-foot rule cannot be said to have been laid arbitrarily without re- 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

gard to the benefits resulting from the improvement, in the absence of any proof to that effect. Leeds v. Defrees, 157 Ind. 392, 61 N. E. 930.

An assessment by the front-foot rule for the cost of repaving a city street is unobjectionable in the absence of any proof that the results were unfair, unjust, and constituted an abuse of power. Alberger v. Baltimore, 64 Md. 1, 20 Atl. 988.

When it nowhere appears in the record that a front-foot basis of an assessment upon property, for the cost of constructing a sewer in a public way, is not proportionate or unreasonable or works any injustice the invalidity is not made out. O'Connell v. First Parish, 204 Mass. 118, 90 N. E. 580.

The front-foot rule of apportionment of an assessment for a street improvement laid upon abutting property, required by law to be in proportion to the benefits conferred by the improvement upon the assessed property, may be resorted to when there are no other facts to show that the result of the use of the front-foot rule is disproportionate and contrary to the amount of benefits. Des Moines Union R. Co. v. Des Moines, 140 Iowa, 218, 18 N. W. 293.

Under a statute merely requiring commissioners of assessment to make a just and equitable assessment for the cost of a street improvement, upon land upon the line of the street, an assessment made by the lineal foot is not invalid, in the absence of evidence that the mode adopted was not just and equitable. State, Hand, Prosecutor, v. Elizabeth, 31 N. J. L. 547.

In apportioning special assessments for local improvements, an arbitrary rule prescribed or adopted is not objectionable if, by its operation, the property is as nearly as practicable assessed in proportion to the special benefits it receives by reason of the improvement. Denver v. Dumars, 33 Colo. 94, 80 Pac. 114.

The adoption and application, in the laying of assessments, of a rule of any sort and wheresoever derived, does not violate a requirement that they be laid with regard to special benefits, if that rule is, in the discretion and judgment of the assessing authority, chosen for the reason that it leads to the required result. Bassett v. New Haven, 76 Conn. 70, 55 Atl. 579.

If an assessment made upon abutting property to pay the cost of a street improvement does not exceed the amount of benefits conferred by such improvement, and the property owner is afforded an opportunity to be heard upon the question of the benefits to his property, it is immaterial what method is adopted to apportion the assessment. Indianapolis v. Holt, 155 Ind. 222, 57 N. E. 966, 988, 1100.

When a statute requires property assessed for a local improvement to be assessed in proportion to the benefits conferred upon it by such improvement, it is immaterial what method is employed by the assessing officers to determine the quantum of benefits received by each parcel assessed, but the result of the assessment must be in proportion to the benefits, or the assessment will be void. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 333, 56 N. Y. Supp. 976.

An assessment for the cost of a local improvement, required by law to be made according to benefits, is not vitiated by an apportionment according to the front-foot rule, if in point of fact such rule was adopted as a reasonable measure of the benefits resulting to the assessed property, under conditions and in circumstances indicating a substantial correspondence between the benefits conferred and the frontage of the assessed property. Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 370, 100 Pac. 942.

If the burdens of an assessment for the construction of a trunk line sewer, beneficial to a district and area beyond the line it follows, are in fact laid upon the property benefited, and fairly and equably distributed as required by law, it is a matter of indifference what method was adopted by the assessing officer to make his calculations of the several amounts of the assessment, whether the rule of frontage or another. Harney v. Benson, 113 Cal. 314, 45 Pac. 687.

If an assessment by the front-foot rule is made for the cost or part of the cost of constructing a sewer, by assessing officers in the exercise of their best judgment, and with an honest purpose to assess the property benefited in proportion to the benefits it received from the work, and such a result is approximately attained by that method, the assessment cannot be successfully assailed upon the ground that special benefits were not its basis. Bassett v. New Haven, supra.

An assessment for the cost of a street improvement upon abutting property according to its frontage, under a statute requiring assessments of that sort to be according to benefits, is not illegal or invalid, if the benefits have actually been ascertained and assessed and found to be approximately in proportion to the frontage of the assessed property. New Whatcom v. Bellingham Bay Improv. Co. 16 Wash. 131, 47 Pac. 236.

Although an assessment for the cost of a street improvement must be based upon the benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed, yet, if the amount of the assessment laid upon the property is actually proportioned to such benefit, the landowner cannot complain that the correct result was reached by a wrong rule or method. Re Elliott Ave. & M. Street, 54 Wash. 297, 103 Pac. 20.

A valid assessment for a street improvement may be laid upon abutting property, if actually benefited by the improvement, according to its frontage, where the amount of benefits are proportioned to such frontage. Strickland v. Stillwater, 63 Minn. 43, 65 N. W. 131.

If an assessment made upon what is called the frontage principle does in fact properly distribute the benefits among the owners of the property benefited, there can be no objection to its use, but that principle must not be arbitrarily applied without the exercise of judgment in each case. Jersey City v. State, 30 N. J. L. 521.

An assessment for grading, curbing, and guttering a street apportioned upon the abutting property according to its frontage, but resting in fact only upon property benefited, and which is, by reason of its uniform character, equally benefited, is valid. State, Hunt, Prosecutor, v. Rahway, 39 N. J. L. 646.

If, in any particular case, an assessment by the front-foot rule properly apportions the burden of a street improvement to property thereby benefited, and in proportion to the amount of benefits which the burdened property receives, the assessment is valid. State, Raymond, Prosecutor, v. Rutherford, 55 N. J. L. 441, 27 Atl. 172.

If an assessment apparently made according to the front-foot rule purports to have been made according to benefits, it will not be disturbed if, under any conceivable condition, the benefits and frontage are substantially equal. Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 370, 100 Pac. 942.

It is perfectly legitimate to adopt the front-foot rule of apportionment as prima facie evidence of the benefits received by assessed abutting property from a local street improvement, provided such rule is not made conclusive, and the right remains to the property owner to be heard upon the question of benefits, and to the local authorities so to apportion the cost of the improvement as to make it conform to the benefits it confers. Hibben v. Smith, 158 Ind. 206, 62 N. E. 447, affirmed in 191 U. S. 310, 48 L. ed. 195, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88.

It is entirely proper to take into account the lineal frontage and size, shape, and location of the property assessed for the cost of a street improvement, in determining the amount of special benefits which the said improvement confers upon the assessed property. Reed v. Cedar Rapids, 137 Iowa, 107, 111 N. W. 1013.

While the front-foot rule of assessment, independent of benefits, is no longer lawful in the state of Iowa, where the statute now requires assessments for public improvement to be proportioned to the special benefits they confer upon the property assessed, and not to exceed such benefits (Cole Supp. 1902, § 792 a), yet it may be used as an aid in determining the quantum of benefits, without invalidating the assessment. Ibid.

The adoption of the front-foot rule of assessment required to be apportioned according to benefits upon abutting property, for a street improvement, is not invalid when it is fairly and reasonably adopted as a method of ascertaining the amount of benefit conferred by the improvement upon the assessed property, and is approximately equal to such benefit. Durkee v. Barre, 81 Vt. 530, 71 Atl. 819.

If assessing officers in point of fact base a local assessment, according to their best judgment, upon the special benefits resulting to the assessed property from the improvement assessed for, the circumstance that the front-foot rule was employed as an aid in computing the amounts and reaching the conclusions will not invalidate the assessment. Jenks v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 296.

An assessment for a street improvement in a city, required by statute to be laid upon the abutting property in proportion to the benefits resulting, is not invalid merely because it has been laid according to the frontage of the assessed property upon the line of the work, where, in good faith, the municipal board empowered to levy the assessment determined that such property is benefited by the improvement substantially in proportion to its frontage. State ex rel. Wheeler v. District Ct. 80 Minn. 293, 83 N. W. 183.

When municipal assessing officers determine in good faith, and without laboring under any mistake as to fact or law, that all the property fronting upon a street assessed for the improvement of that street is especially and to an equal degree benefited by such improvement, the front-foot rule of apportioning the assessment may properly be employed to determine the amounts to be charged to each lot. Ibid.

When assessing officers actually take into account benefits conferred upon the assessed property by a street improvement, and assess it accordingly, their action is not void merely because they made the apportionment by the aid of the front-foot rule. State, Pudney, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 37 N. J. L. 65.

The mere fact that commissioners of assessment, in assessing upon abutting property the cost of a street improvement, have used the front-foot rule as an aid to making their assessments, will not invalidate the assessment, if the commissioners in fact were guided by the principle that the assessment must be apportioned according to the benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed. State, Kohler, Prosecutor, v. Guttenberg, 38 N. J. L. 419.

Assessors do not necessarily act upon an erroneous principle in employing the front-foot rule of assessment, when the statute requires the property assessed for an improvement to be assessed proportionally to the benefits received, provided they act in good faith, with an honest purpose and intention to levy the assessment fairly and equitably, and do so levy it according to the benefits and their best judgment as to what such benefits are. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 333, 56 N. Y. Supp. 976.

An apportionment according to the front-foot rule, of an assessment which the statute requires to be laid according to benefits, does not, in and of itself, vitiate an assessment, provided it affirmatively appears that the assessment was in fact laid according to benefits fairly and reasonably estimated in the judgment of the assessors and approximately the same as an assessment arrived at by application of the front-foot rule. Hennessey v. Douglas County, 99 Wis. 129, 74 N. W. 983.

An assessor who adopts the frontage rule in assessing the cost of grading, curbing, and paving a city street, pursuant to a conclusion that all the lands similarly situated with reference to such improvement were alike benefited thereby, and has reasonable grounds for his conclusion, does not act upon an erroneous principle, and the assessment he makes is valid. Mansfield v. Lockport, 24 Misc. 25, 52 N. Y. Supp. 571.

An assessment for the paving of a street cannot be said to have been made upon an erroneous principle of assessing for benefits, when it appears to have been made by the assessors in good faith, in the exercise of an honest judgment, and facts exist for the consideration of the assessors and upon which the exercise of their judgment as to the amount of benefits was based. Voght v. Buffalo, 133 N. Y. 403, 31 N. E. 340.

Under a municipal charter empowering the common council to grade, pave, or repair the city streets and highways, and to defray the expense thereof by special assessment upon real estate within the city and the owners of it, as the assessors shall determine to be more immediately benefited by the improvement, the assessors act judicially, and do not necessarily adopt an erroneous principle, in concluding that the assessment for such an improvement shall be apportioned among the owners of the real estate bordering upon the improved street according to the number of front feet owned by each individual, when, in the judgment of the assessors, each owner is benefited in that proportion. O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 439, 21 N. E. 1004, affirming 39 Hun, 285.

An assessment upon abutting property for the grading of a street and the construction of a sewer therein, according to the front-foot rule, is valid, notwithstanding the assessor was charged with the judicial duty, in apportioning the cost of the improvements, to assess it upon the property which, in his judgment, derived benefit therefrom in proportion to the benefits conferred, provided such assessor exercised his best judgment in discharging that duty, even if he did employ the front-foot plan of apportionment. People ex rel. O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 App. Div. 326, 99 N. Y. Supp. 657.

When an assessor, in following the front-foot plan of apportioning an assessment for the cost of grading a street and constructing a sewer therein, actually takes into consideration the values of the different parcels of property assessed, and whether they are improved or not, and their uses, and honestly determines that the benefits they receive are actually in proportion to their frontage, and that such an apportionment is fair and equitable, the assessment is valid, and not based upon any erroneous principle. Ibid.

An assessment cannot be set aside because the front-foot rule was employed in making it, when the assessors, after examining the premises and upon reasonable grounds, decided that the benefits to be derived from the improvement were alike and equal to each lot, and that each lot should equitably bear an equal amount of the assessment. Re Gardner, 41 How. Pr. 255.

If assessing officers, in apportioning the cost of a local improvement, visit the locality of it, examine the assessed property, and ascertain the value and extent of the benefit conferred upon such property, and really make such benefit the basis of the assessment, the validity of such assessment is unaffected by the circumstance that it was worked out by the front-foot rule. English v. Arizona, 214 U. S. 359, 53 L. ed. 1030, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658.

An objection was made to a sewer assessment in Newell v. Bristol, 78 Conn. 571, 63 Atl. 355, upon the ground that it had been apportioned by an arbitrary rule according to the number of front feet, without apparent reference to any other consideration, but the facts failed to sustain the objection. It was found by the court that an arbitrary front-foot rule had not been the basis of computation. The front-foot rule had been used, but the values of the assessed lots had been considered and fairly estimated, and the assessment complained of was fair and reasonable.

An objection that an assessment for the cost of constructing a sewer was made by the front-foot rule, and not by ascertaining the special benefits, is not sustained where a city board of equalization has judged and determined that the several parcels of property assessed had each been specially benefited to the amount of the tax levied against each, and the evidence discloses that the benefits from the sewer were virtually confined to the assessment district, and that each lot therein was benefited specially, substantially, equally, with the others, so that the front-foot method of assessment was not inequitable. Shannon v. Omaha, 73 Neb. 507, 103 N. W. 53, 106 N. W. 502.

When local assessors, in levying an assessment for the paving of a street and the making of water, gas, and sewer connections, do not act arbitrarily, but take into consideration the state of the property and the improvements upon it, and all the existing conditions, and then determine that an assessment by uniform foot frontage is the most equitable of any that can be made, they act judicially, and their determination will not be disturbed by the courts in all ordinary cases. Donovan v. Oswego, 90 App. Div. 397, 86 N. Y. Supp. 155, reversing 39 Misc. 291, 79 N. Y. Supp. 562.

An assessment for paving a street, laid upon the abutting property according to its frontage, is not invalid if it is actually and in fact apportioned according to the benefits conferred upon such property by the improvement. State, Johnston, Prosecutor, v. Trenton, 43 N. J. L. 166.

To render valid an assessment required by law to be laid upon property benefited, to 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) defray the cost of a local improvement, it must appear affirmatively by the report of the commissioners that they examined the whole matter and imposed the burden in proportion to the benefits received. State, Hoboken Land & Improv. Co., Prosecutor, v. Hoboken, 36 N. J. L. 291.

When parcels of land along the line of a sewer are assessed for the cost of it in proportion to the special benefits accruing therefrom, the fact that the commissioners of assessment reported the frontage of the lots on the line of improvement, or assessed against each the exact cost of the portion of the sewer in front of it, will not of itself vitiate the assessment. Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359, 20 N. E. 86.

A special assessment for an improvement made on the basis of frontage merely, and without any regard to special benefits, said the court in Walker v. Aurora, 140 Ill. 402, 29 N. E. 741, would be invalid; but we know of no rule which would preclude the commissioners appointed to make a special assessment from taking into consideration the number of feet of frontage of the several lots to be assessed upon the street or improvement as an element in the ascertainment of benefits. . . . It may be that a given improvement will frequently be of benefit to the several parcels of real estate thereby benefited in exact proportion to the frontage of said several parcels upon such improvement.

That an assessment for a sewer corresponds with the frontage of the assessed property on the line of the work will not invalidate it, when it is shown that the assessing officer made the assessment according to the benefits, and determined that such benefits were equal to the sums assessed. Sanitary Dist. v. Joliet, 189 Ill. 270, 59 N. E. 506.

The mere circumstance that an assessment for the construction of a sewer is the same in amount as if the front-foot rule had been employed to determine it does not of itself establish that the assessment was arbitrarily made, without regard to the special benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed. Wray v. Fry, 158 Ind. 93, 62 N. E. 1004.

An assessment which purports and is recited to have been made in proportion to benefits is not impeached by the circumstance that the result is the same as if it had been laid under the front-foot rule. Hedge v. Des Moines, 141 Iowa, 4, 119 N. W. 276.

The coincidence that the benefits from a public improvement appeared to be in proportion to the frontage of each parcel of property along the line of the improvement cannot be urged against the positive declaration of the assessors in their reports that they made the assessments according to the peculiar benefits each parcel of property had received. Kirtland v. Parker, 76 N. J. L. 217, 68 Atl. 913.

The court, in Alexander v. Tacoma, 35 Wash. 366, 77 Pac. 686, in dealing with the objection that the assessment in hand had been made without regard to benefits, said: It is not disputed that the assessment is purported to have been made according to benefits, and that the city council found that it was so made, but it is said that this finding is merely colorable and perfunctory, because it appears that all of the lots were assessed alike, and for the precise amount they were assessed for when the apportionment was made according to the front-foot plan, and concededly without reference to benefits. It seems to us, however, that these facts argue nothing. Surely, it cannot be denied that a possible condition could exist where an improvement of a street would benefit all of the lots thereon precisely alike, yet it must be so denied in order to overturn this assessment in this proceeding. The assessment to be overturned in this proceeding must be void on its face, and it could only be void for the reason here given, on the theory that under no conceivable conditions could lots abutting upon an improvement be equally benefited thereby. But so far from this being impossible, it would seem that it would be found to actually exist in many instances. To pave and curb a street which has already been brought to grade, and the abutting property built upon with reference thereto, would seem rather to benefit each part of it alike than otherwise, especially where, as in this case, no unusual or special conditions are shown to exist.

The mere fact that assessors adopt a uniform rule of frontage in assessing the cost of a sewer upon the several parcels of property fronting upon the street through which the sewer is constructed, and a different yet uniform rule in assessing property not situated on such street, but benefited by such sewer, does not raise a presumption that they failed to make the assessment, according to their judgment, in the ratio of benefits resulting to the premises assessed from such sewer. Denise v. Fairport, 11 Misc. 199, 32 N. Y. Supp. 97.

The manner of estimating the benefits to abutting property from street improvements in municipalities is not confined to an actual appraisal by appraisers appointed for the purpose. Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L.R.A. 330, 14 S. E. 521; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738; Kinston v. Loftin, 149 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069.

While the report of a board of public works, reciting that the requirements of the municipal charter were duly followed in determining both the damages and benefits occasioned by grading a street, is prima facie sufficient to sustain the validity of an assessment, nevertheless evidence aliunde showing the conclusion of the board to have been reached without the exercise of judgment, and according to a uniform assessment per front foot, overcomes the presumption arising upon such a report, and establishes the invalidity of the assessment, unless rebutted by independent proof to the 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) contrary. Friedrich v. Milwaukee, 118 Wis. 254, 95 N. W. 126.

An allegation in a complaint in an action to nullify a local assessment, averring that the assessors did not view the premises, or consider the amount proposed to be made a charge thereon or the benefits which would accrue in consequence of the proposed improvement, and did not assess the amount of benefits, states a good cause of action, when the statute under which the assessment purports to have been, and by authority of which it only could have been, laid, requires assessments to be made in proportion to and not in excess of benefits. Pittelkow v. Milwaukee, 94 Wis. 651, 60 N. W. 803.

XVI. Failures of the front-foot rule to represent benefits.

a. Rural lands.

The front-foot rule being but a rough and ready method of measuring benefits flowing from a local improvement to property subjected to assessment to defray the expense thereof, it logically follows that it ought not to be employed in any case where it is obvious that it does not and cannot possibly be a standard by which to measure such benefits.

The courts are virtually agreed that this is the case in respect of assessments upon rural lands.

An assessment for the opening and improvement of a highway through a rural district, apportioned according to frontage of the abutting lands, is so manifestly out of relation and correspondence to any possible benefits conferred as to be palpably unreasonable and unjust and in contravention of constitutional provisions forbidding the imposition of unequal and un-uniform taxation for public purposes upon selected individuals. Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255; Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. 360, 22 Am. Rep. 760; Kaiser v. Weise, 85 Pa. 366; Craig v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 265.

To assess property in the country, which is not laid off in lots, in proportion to its frontage, for the cost of constructing a sewer in an adjacent or nearby street or way, presumptively is unreasonable. Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L.R.A. 642, 51 N. E. 204.

The completely rural character of the territory in which a tract assessed for a highway improvement is situated protects it from the frontage rule of taxation. Philadelphia use of Johnson v. Rule, 93 Pa. 15; Person's Appeal, 96 Pa. 140; Scranton v. Pennsylvania Coal Co. 105 Pa. 445.

An assessment upon abutting property for the cost of grading streets, levied by a municipal corporation according to the front-foot rule and under the direct authority of an act of the legislature, is valid so far as it is applied to urban property in the populated portions of the city, but invalid and unenforceable with respect of rural property unimproved, although within the corporate limits. Hand v. Fellows, 148 Pa. 456, 23 Atl. 1126; McCall v. Coates, 148 Pa. 462, 23 Atl. 1127; Scranton v. Bush, 160 Pa. 499, 28 Atl. 926.

In rural neighborhoods and farming districts an assessment for a local improvement cannot constitutionally be made according to the front-foot rule. McKeesport v. Soles, 165 Pa. 628, 30 Atl. 1019.

Property not cut up into compact city lots, or built upon as city lots, at a time when a street or highway contiguous thereto is paved, cannot legally be charged with the expense of the pavement according to the front-foot rule of assessment. Philadelphia v. Gorgas, 180 Pa. 296, 36 Atl. 868.

Property in rural districts, assessed for a local improvement, can lawfully be assessed only in proportion to the benefits derived from the improvement. As to such property the front-foot rule is not applicable. Anderson v. Lower Merion Twp. 217 Pa. 369, 66 Atl. 1115.

The front-foot rule of assessment is not applicable and cannot be constitutionally applied in rural neighborhoods. Philadelphia v. Manderfield, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 373.

The front-foot rule of assessment for the cost of improving a highway is inequitable and does not apply to rural and agricultural property, although within the corporate limits of a city, but such property can be lawfully assessed only in proportion to certain benefits. Wilson v. Allegheny, 25 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 15.

An assessment for the cost of a street improvement, laid in proportion to frontage upon a tract of 40 acres of land unplatted and used exclusively for farm purposes, is invalid. Ryan v. Sumner, 17 Wash. 228, 49 Pac. 487.

The court in Philadelphia use of Peters v. Keith, 1 Sadler (Pa.) 359, 2 Atl. 207, declared it well settled that where property is rural there is no power to charge it by the front-foot measure of liability for the cost of paving an avenue upon which it abuts.

It is well settled, said the court in Allentown v. Adams, 5 Sadler (Pa.) 253, 8 Atl. 430, that when land in front of which water-service pipes are laid is farm land and suburban property, it cannot be assessed for such an improvement according to the front-foot rule.

The frontage rule of taxation, when applied to country property, is unequal, unjust, and unconstitutional; and in saying this, said the court in Philadelphia use of Johnson v. Rule, supra, we but repeat what has been said over and over again in a long series of cases, commencing with the Washington Avenue Case, supra, and ending with Craig v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 268.

Where a street within the corporate limits of a city is improved by grading and paving, and a statute authorizes the cost of such an improvement to be assessed upon abutting property according to the front-foot rule, and the property along the line of 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

said street constitutes both city lots and rural or farming lands, the former may be lawfully assessed in proportion to its frontage on the street, and the latter according and in proportion to the benefits conferred by the street improvement upon it, but not by the front-foot rule. Scranton v. Bush, supra.

While an assessment by the front foot for a street improvement, laid upon rural or farm lands, is so plainly unfair and extortionate that it cannot be sustained, nevertheless an assessment upon lots within city limits and near to the built-up portion of the city, with dwellings around them, although there is a surrounding vacant area, where they are laid out as city lots for building purposes, must be regarded rather as urban than as rural property or farm lands. Bishop v. Tripp, 15 R. I. 466, 8 Atl. 692.

The front-foot rule of assessment for improvements in streets and highways cannot be applied to rural property; but when the property ceases to be farm lands, and becomes city property, it may lawfully be assessed by that method for such improvements; and the question whether or not the character of the property has changed in any particular locality is one of fact for a jury. Philadelphia v. Sheridan, 148 Pa. 532, 24 Atl. 80; McKeesport v. Soles, supra.

Although an assessment against rural property, even if situated within the corporate limits of a city, by the front-foot rule, for the cost of paving and curbing a street, is invalid, the character of the property as rural or urban is to be determined by the conditions existing when the improvement is made, and not when the ordinance authorizing the improvement is adopted. Keith v. Philadelphia, 126 Pa. 575, 17 Atl. 883.

If it be granted that the power exists in the legislature to annex adjoining territory to a municipal corporation, and it exercises that power in annexing farming lands not laid off into lots and not needed for city purposes, it is very clear that such land must afterwards be taxed by the same rule as other property in the political division to which it belongs at the time. This much is required by the constitutional rule of uniformity. Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 243.

Rural land within municipal limits in the state of Pennsylvania is not assessable for street improvements according to its frontage; but if its character is contested, the burden of proving it to be rural land rests on the landowner. Stewart v. Philadelphia, 3 Sadler (Pa.) 137, 7 Atl. 192; Allentown v. Adams, supra.

b. Property off the line of improvement.

There is also a fairly general agreement among the courts that the front-foot rule is equally inapplicable to measure the benefits to property lying off the line of improvement for which it is assessed to pay.

The contiguous property which is authorized to be taxed or assessed specially for a local street improvement is only the property that abuts on the street. Langlois v. Cameron, 201 Ill. 301, 66 N. E. 332.

An assessment for the cost of constructing a sewer, laid upon lots which do not abut upon the line of the work, but lie in another part of the sewer assessment district, imposed according to their frontage, is prima facie arbitrary and unreasonable. Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L.R.A. 642, 51 N. E. 204.

Land in the vicinity of a street cannot be said to be benefited in any degree beyond the general public by the improvement in such street, and therefore cannot be specially assessed to defray the cost of improving it. Re Fifty-fourth Street, 165 Pa. 8, 30 Atl. 503; Re Morewood Ave. 159 Pa. 20, 28 Atl. 123, 132.

No property can be assessed by the front-foot rule for the cost of a sewer, except such as abuts on the line of the work. Witman v. Reading, 169 Pa. 375, 32 Atl. 576; Parker's Appeal, 169 Pa. 433, 32 Atl. 574.

When the cost of construction of one branch or line of a sewer is greatly disproportioned to the cost of another branch or line in the same system, an assessment made upon all property in the entire district served by the system, according to the average cost per foot frontage in the whole district, is invalid and illegal, because of necessity some parcels are overcharged and others not charged enough. Anderson v. Lower Merion Twp. 217 Pa. 369, 66 Atl. 1115.

A municipal ordinance providing for constructing many sidewalks upon a number of unconnected streets in a wide district, and specially taxing the parcels of abutting property for the cost in proportion to their frontage, is unreasonable and void, because the improvement of any one or more streets cannot be supposed to confer benefits upon property on other streets. People ex rel. Raymond v. Latham, 203 Ill. 9, 67 N. E. 403; People ex rel. Raymond v. Grover, 203 Ill. 24, 67 N. E. 165; People ex rel. Hanberg v. Stearns, 213 Ill. 184, 72 N. E. 728.

c. When benefits are utterly ignored.

It ought also logically to follow that once it is established by competent evidence in a proper proceeding that the question of benefits has not been considered at all, but, on the contrary, has been wholly disregarded in imposing an assessment by the arbitrary application of the front-foot rule, and that the case is one in which such rule is not generally accepted as a prima facie measure of benefits,—that the rule has been illegally employed, and, consequently, that the assessment laid by its means is invalid.

There is a respectable number of cases which have so decided. St. John v. East St. Louis, 50 Ill. 92; Morrison v. Chicago, 142 Ill. 660, 32 N. E. 172; Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155, 24 Am. Rep. 535; State, Hutton, Prosecutor v. West Orange Twp. 39 N. J. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

L. 453; State, Morris, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 40 N. J. L. 485.

An assessment of the total cost of a street improvement, laid upon the abutting property according to the front-foot rule, regardless of the special benefits accruing from the improvement to such property, and in some instances largely in excess thereof, is invalid and void. McKee v. Pendleton, 154 Ind. 652, 57 N. E. 532.

When an assessment is arbitrary, based solely upon the cost of the work, and laid upon the assessed property according to its frontage, without any consideration of the benefits conferred by the improvement, and without regard to such benefits, it is void under statutes requiring assessments to be laid according to the benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed. Kersten v. Milwaukee, 106 Wis. 200, 48 L.R.A. 851, 81 N. W. 948, 1103.

If the evidence establishes that a uniform assessment according to frontage for the cost of grading a street is arbitrary, and made regardless of a provision in the municipal charter that the effect of grading as to each lot or parcel of land assessed must be considered and determined as a separate matter, the assessment is void. Friedrich v. Milwaukee, 118 Wis. 254, 95 N. W. 120; Haubner v. Milwaukee, 124 Wis. 158, 101 N. W. 930, 102 N. W. 578.

The facts must, of course, clearly establish such arbitrary action on the part of the assessors, in order to bring about such a result. Loewenbach v. Milwaukee, 139 Wis. 49, 119 N. W. 888.

When an assessment is obviously an arbitrary one, and laid only in accordance with the front-foot rule, without regard to the size, shape, or depth of the parcels of land upon which the burden is laid, or the situation, location, and other circumstances of the property, and by ignoring the question of special benefits, an assessment for a road improvement is invalid. State, N. Y. & G. L. R. Co., Prosecutor, v. Kearney Twp. 55 N. J. L. 463, 26 Atl. 800.

When an assessment is required by law to be made for the cost of constructing a sewer, upon the lots especially taxed, in proportion to the benefits they respectively receive from the work, an apportionment made without mention or reference to benefits, and without regard to the value or use of the property assessed, but strictly in proportion to the frontage of such property on the line of the work, raises a strong inference that the requirements of the law have not been observed, since it can scarcely be possible that the improvement in value has been in this exact proportion; and, although the inference is not conclusive, it is an important circumstance tending to show the invalidity of the assessment. Warren v. Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24.

A statute providing for the assessment of the cost of constructing sewers upon the property in the assessment district, in proportion to the front feet of the lands or lots included, and in proportion to the benefits derived from sewerage improvement, requires the special benefits to the assessed property from the improvement to be taken into account in applying the frontage rule. Blackwell v. Coeur D'Alene, 13 Idaho, 357, 90 Pac. 353.

The supreme requisite of an assessment proportioned to special benefits is, in the absence of specific legislative directions, the exercise of judgment and discretion by the assessing authority in the choice of means, or otherwise to reach the required end. Passett v. New Haven, 76 Conn. 70, 55 Atl. 579.

To be valid, an assessment laid according to the front-foot rule must substantially approximate an assessment made according to benefits. Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. 360, 22 Am. Rep. 760.

Assessors directed to assess property for a local improvement in proportion to benefits conferred may take the superficial area, or the frontage, as a basis of computation to ascertain what sum should be charged, but neither method will meet the requirement unless the amount levied is proportioned to the benefits. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 333, 56 N. Y. Supp. 976.

It is the duty of assessors, in determining the amounts which ought to be assessed to lots or parcels of land for the work of filling in a city street, to determine the proportions according to the actual benefits received by the property assessed. An assessment made in any other way is made upon principles contrary to law. State, Mann, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. L. 662.

When a statute requires a special assessment for a street improvement to be laid only upon the property thereby benefited, and in proportion to the benefits conferred, it is essential to the validity of an assessment apportioned according to frontage, that the property be inspected and examined and found, by the exercise of judgment and upon consideration of facts and circumstances, to be benefited approximately in proportion to its frontage. Elma v. Carney, 9 Wash. 466, 37 Pac. 707.

While the judgment of a municipal board of public works as to what property is benefited by a local improvement, and how much it is benefited, when exercised in good faith and uninfluenced by any mistake of fact or misapplication of legal rules, is conclusive, nevertheless it is essential that the judgment and discretion of the municipal authorities be actually exercised; and if they arbitrarily adopt a hard and fast rule of assessment, without exercising any judgment or discretion, and in utter disregard of all other considerations, the assessment will be void. State ex rel. Eaton v. District Ct. 95 Minn. 503, 104 N. W. 553.

When commissioners are required by statute to assess the expense of grading a street upon the property benefited, in proportion to the benefit each parcel on the line of the street receives from the improvement, an assessment made by them in proportion to the frontage of property on the line of the work, without the exercise of their judgment in determining the benefits, is invalid, notwithstanding they assert that they did take into account the benefits conferred, and decided such benefits to be in proportion to the frontage of the property assessed, when the record of their proceedings conclusively and manifestly shows that they simply divided the whole expense by the number of lineal feet fronting on the street to get the foot rate, and then merely multiplied the number of front feet by the foot rate to ascertain the amount each proprietor was to pay. State, Hampson, Prosecutor, v. Paterson, 36 N. J. L. 159.

When an assessment for a street improvement has been apportioned by the front-foot rule, without regard to the question of benefits conferred by the improvement upon the property assessed, and the proofs establish the fact that such benefits are greatly less in value than the burden imposed, the essential element of a constitutional assessment is lacking, and the assessment must be vacated and annulled. State, Kohler, Prosecutor, v. Guttenberg, 38 N. J. L. 419.

An assessment for the cost of opening and extending a city street, laid upon a strip of territory two and one half squares wide upon both sides of the way, and extending for three fourths of a mile along the portions of the street already opened, according to the front-foot rule, without regard to the value of the assessed property as separate parcels, and without ascertaining the amount of benefit to each parcel assessed,—is an erroneous and unequitable basis of taxation, and cannot be sustained. Re Walnut Street, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 173.

When a city charter authorizes the corporation to construct and repair sewers in any street, and assess the whole or any part of the cost thereof upon real estate benefited thereby, in proportion to such benefits, without regard to the cash valuation, the adoption of an arbitrary and illegal principle in assessing the cost of such an improvement, according to the cost thereof in front of the respective lots, without regard to the benefits, vitiates the assessment. Duluth v. Davidson, 97 Minn. 378, 107 N. W. 151.

An act under which an assessment for the cost of laying a water main in a public street is laid upon abutting property, not by reason of any benefits conferred upon such property, but for a definite sum, regardless of benefit, is unconstitutional. Doughten v. Camden, 72 N. J. L. 451, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 817, 111 Am. St. Rep. 680, 63 Atl. 170, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 902.

If the legislature attempts to fix, or authorize a municipality to fix, an arbitrary basis of assessment for local improvements, wholly ignoring the principle of peculiar and especial benefits to the assessed property, the owner, under the guise of taxation, is deprived of his property, without just compensation, for public use, in violation of the Constitution. State v. Pillsbury, 82 Minn. 359, 85 N. W. 175.

While a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to prescribe the manner in which assessments for local improvements may be made upon abutting property, or property benefited by such improvement, or upon both, empowers the legislature to apportion and assess the cost of local improvements according to foot frontage, it does not authorize an assessment by that rule, which wholly ignores and disregards the fundamental rule upon which special assessments are made, namely, that of benefit to the property assessed. Ibid.

A provision in a city charter relating to all sewers constructed, relaid, or extended during any one season and throughout the entire city, which contemplates that at the end of the season the cost of all sewers constructed during that period shall be marshaled for the purpose of ascertaining the total cost, and thereupon the city council shall levy and proceed to collect from abutting property an equal sum per foot front, without regard to the valuation of such property or the size or cost of the sewer, which sum shall not exceed $4 the lineal foot, the rate to be fixed by resolution, and to remain from year to year until it is affirmatively changed by resolution of the council, or until the council decides to follow another plan for the construction and assessment of sewers,—is arbitrary and unreasonable, and an assessment made in accordance with it is invalid and void because of ignoring the basic principle that the special and peculiar benefits to the assessed property which result from a local improvement must govern in such cases. Ibid.

XVII. The front-foot rule as affected by the sort of improvement.

a. Improvements under the police power.

At first blush it might be supposed that the character of a local improvement could have no influence in determining the question whether the method, whatever it might be, employed to levy an assessment to pay for it, ought to be approved. In practice, however, it has had an effect in sustaining or impeaching the fairness of the front-foot rule in certain classes of cases.

A little consideration will show that when a local improvement is required in the exercise of the police power, the question of compensatory benefits to the assessed landowner is seldom, if ever, of more than minor importance. He may be, and often is, required to make the improvement at his own expense, regardless of benefit to himself or his property. On the other hand, when a local improvement is made through the employment of the power of eminent domain, the question of compensation to the assessed landowner is frequently of prime, if not vital, importance. In the one 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) case the use of the front-foot rule probably will be acquiesced in, as, of course, in the other its application is likely to be subjected to close scrutiny.

The construction or repair of a sidewalk in a city street is a conspicuous and typical improvement under the police power.

Assessments by the front-foot rule to defray the expense of new sidewalks are almost universally accepted as just and equitable.

An assessment by a municipal corporation under the authority of an act of the legislature empowering it to construct sidewalks and assess the cost upon the owners of lots fronting upon the line of the work, apportioned according to the number of front feet in the abutting property, is fair, just, and equitable in all ordinary cases. Hyattsville v. Smith, 105 Md. 318, 66 Atl. 44; Wilzinski v. Greenville, 85 Miss. 393, 37 So. 807.

An allegation that an assessment upon abutting property for the expense of constructing a sidewalk is greater than its just and proportionate share is not sustained when there is no other evidence upon which to base it than that the assessment for paving the sidewalk, assessed by the running foot, is greater upon the particular lot than an assessment at the same rate upon adjoining property. Dickinson v. Worcester, 138 Mass. 555.

In the case of Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461, 8 L.R.A. 369, 7 So. 386, declared McClellan, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 638, 37 So. 291, this court sustained as a constitutional and valid enactment a statute which authorized the corporate authorities of Birmingham to grade and pave the sidewalks along the streets of the city, and to assess the total cost thereof, although it might be greatly in excess of the value of the benefits to abutting property.

It is true, he added, that this cost was to be assessed on this property "in proportion to the amount of the benefit accruing to the" property owners, but, said he, this only meant that there should be some rule of apportionment of the whole charge having reference to the benefit received by the respective owners, and not that no owner should be charged in excess of actual benefits received. The provision would have been fully complied with through an apportionment according to frontage on the sidewalk of the respective abutting lots, and so the act was construed in the opinion.

The court, in Independence v. Gates, 110 Mo. 374, 19 S. W. 728, discussing the principle upon which taxes for local improvements should be levied, said, in some cases it is done by levying an ad valorem tax on the property situated in the district previously designated, in others it is raised on the basis of benefits to be fixed by assessors, in others by the front-foot rule, as it is termed, in others by the superficial area; but it is now almost universally denied that an owner can be compelled to pay the whole cost of the improvement of the street in front of his lot. In such a case the tax would neither be increased nor diminished by the assessment upon his neighbors, and each particular lot would arbitrarily be made a taxing district and charged with the whole expenditure thereon. It is evident, therefore, that a law for making assessments on this basis could not have in view such distribution of burdens in proportion to benefits as ought to be a cardinal idea in every tax law. It would be an arbitrary command of the law to each lot owner to construct the street in front of his lot at his own expense, according to a prescribed standard; and the power to issue such command could never be exercised by a constitutional government, unless we are at liberty to treat it as a police regulation, and place the duty to make the streets upon the same footing as to keep the sidewalk free from obstruction and fit for passage; but such an idea is clearly inadmissible.

The distinction between the two classes of improvements is marked in the decisions of the courts of New Jersey, which, with more consistency than those of other states, have maintained the necessity of equivalent benefits to the validity of assessments for local improvements.

While it is recognized and settled in this state, said the court in Van Wagoner v. Paterson, 67 N. J. L. 455, 51 Atl. 922, that the cost of public streets and other municipal improvements can only be assessed upon abutting property owners to the extent of the benefits conferred, it is still held with us that the whole cost of sidewalks may be assessed upon abutting property irrespective of benefits, and that the cost of gutters may also be so assessed.

The cost of a sidewalk or its improvement in a city may constitutionally be charged upon private property, without regard to the question of benefits conferred, because a sidewalk is subservient and appurtenant to the land upon which it fronts. State, Agents, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729; State, Simmons, Prosecutor, v. Passaic, 42 N. J. L. 524.

The same distinction is apparent in the legislation and decisions of the state of Illinois.

Under the former Constitution of Illinois it was held in Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 211, following Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203, that a local assessment upon abutting property for the cost of a street sidewalk, apportioned pro rata to the frontage of the lots, was unconstitutional and void because, if the charge was in the nature of a tax, it was not based on the value of the assessed property, neither was it equal and uniform in its incidence, while if it was an exercise of the right of eminent domain, inasmuch as it was not apportioned according to special benefits, the needed element of compensation was lacking.

In 1870, after this decision, Illinois amended her Constitution and provided [art. 9, § 9] that the general assembly might vest the corporate authorities of cities, towns, and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessments, or by special taxation of contiguous property, or otherwise.

Under that Constitution, assessments for the entire expense of building sidewalks, imposed upon abutting property in proportion to its frontage on the line of the work, were held when made by statutory authority to be constitutional and valid. White v. People, 94 Ill. 604; Craw v. Tolono, 96 Ill. 255, 36 Am. Rep. 143.

In such cases it was said that the question whether or not an assessment for the expense of building a sidewalk, apportioned according to the frontage of the assessed and abutting property, exceeded the benefits conferred, was altogether immaterial. Ibid.

If, under this Constitution, property contiguous to a local improvement is specially taxed to pay for it, the burden may be distributed either ad valorem or according to frontage, and the resulting benefits need not be considered. Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 11, 7 N. E. 471.

The courts of Illinois at this time made a distinction between special taxation and special assessments to pay for local improvements, which Chief Justice Mulkey carefully explained in the last cited case. In cases of special taxation the municipal authorities, said he, may, if they think proper, lay the whole burden upon the contiguous property, and, although theoretically this is permitted on the hypothesis that the benefits will equal the load, yet whether or not this is so cannot be inquired, — the propriety, even the justice of it, unless the commissioners act corruptly, cannot be reviewed. A special assessment differs from special taxation mainly in this, that the assessment cannot in any case or circumstances exceed the benefits the property will derive from the improvement, and the owner of the assessed property, if dissatisfied, has the right to have this question passed upon by a jury, and, if not content with the finding, to have it reviewed by an appellate tribunal. Ibid.

This distinction between special taxation and special assessments to meet the expense of local improvements was again stated in Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 269, 11 N. E. 261.

We have, said the court, in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, 153 Ill. 649, 39 N. E. 1077, held in many cases, some of them decided within a very recent period, that in special taxation the benefits are determined by the municipal authority, while in special assessments they are ascertained in the mode prescribed by law.

The only occasion when the courts essayed to interfere in cases of special taxation for local improvements was when the action of the assessing authorities was so arbitrary and unreasonable as to amount to an abuse of power. Palmer v. Danville, 154 Ill. 156, 38 N. E. 1067.

While the question of benefits from a local improvement is one for the city council to decide in levying a special tax for service pipe connections with a street water main, yet it cannot arbitrarily decide and ordain in the same ordinance that the property on one side of the street is benefited in a greater degree than the property on the other side by the lateral service pipes, simply because the main conduit was more to one side than the other. Ibid.

We have held over and over again, declared the court in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Elmhurst, 165 Ill. 148, 46 N. E. 437, that under the statute in pursuance of which the present tax was levied, the determination of the common council is final on the question of benefits, and that the landowner cannot go behind the action of the city council imposing the tax, and inquire what benefit, if any, the property owners receive on account of the improvement.

This continued to be the law in Illinois until 1895; when the legislature intervened by statute and made the determination of city councils respecting benefits from local improvements to the property specially taxed to pay for them, open to judicial review in the same manner as if the property had been specially assessed. Palmer v. Danville, 166 Ill. 42, 46 N. E. 629; Hull v. People, 170 Ill. 246, 48 N. E. 984; Birket v. Peoria, 185 Ill. 369, 57 N. E. 30; East St. Louis v. Illinois C. R. Co. 238 Ill. 296, 87 N. E. 407.

Although, since the 1895 amendment, a property owner charged with a share of the cost of a local improvement in front of his property may have the question of resulting benefits passed upon by the courts, the same in cases of special taxation as in cases of special assessments, nevertheless there remain still some radical differences in the methods of levying between special taxes and special assessments. East St. Louis v. Illinois C. R. Co. supra.

This somewhat lengthy digression will appear justified by reference to the other Illinois cases holding that the act of 1895 did not apply to special taxes levied upon contiguous property, to pay for sidewalks constructed or repaired under the sidewalk statute enacted twenty years before. People ex rel. Gleason v. Yancey, 167 Ill. 255, 47 N. E. 521; Job v. Alton, 189 Ill. 256, 82 Am. St. Rep. 448, 59 N. E. 622.

A special tax for the construction of a sidewalk, imposed by municipal ordinance according to the front-foot rule, is valid unless shown to be unjust, unreasonable, and oppressive. Job v. Alton, supra.

The Illinois statute of 1875 is strictly a sidewalk act, independent and distinct from other municipal local-improvement laws, and does not authorize an improvement of any other kind. People ex rel. Raymond v. Field, 197 Ill. 568, 64 N. E. 544; People ex rel. Raymond v. Latham, 203 Ill. 9, 67 N. E. 403.

It is the settled policy of Illinois, according to the court in Gage v. Chicago, 203 Ill. 26, 67 N. E. 477, to regard sidewalks as a kind of local improvement, properly classed by itself.

b. Improvements involving the power of eminent domain.

Inasmuch as in the United States private property cannot be taken from its owner for public use without making him just compensation, it is plain that when a street is opened, extended, or widened, the land taken for the purpose must be paid for either in money or equivalent benefits. Accordingly, in the famous case of Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187, it was held that a special assessment for the entire cost and expense of opening a village street, including both the compensation paid for the land taken and the expenses of all the proceedings connected therewith, imposed by the village ordinance upon the bordering land belonging to the same person who owned the land taken for the street, laid by the arbitrary application of the front-foot rule, in utter disregard of the question of benefits, amounted in effect to a taking of private property for public use without compensation, and was therefore unconstitutional and void. It is, said Mr. Justice Harlan in the opinion of the court in that case, one thing for the legislature to prescribe it as a general rule that property abutting on a street opened by the public shall be deemed to have been specially benefited by such improvement, and therefore should specially contribute to the cost incurred by the public: it is quite a different thing to lay it down as an absolute rule that such property, whether it is in fact benefited or not by the opening of the street, may be assessed by the front foot for a fixed sum representing the whole cost of the improvement, and without any right in the property owner to show, when an assessment of that kind is made or is about to be made, that the sum so fixed is in excess of the benefits received.

It will not escape observation, he continued later, that, if the entire cost incurred by a municipal corporation in condemning land for the purpose of opening or extending a street can be assessed back upon the abutting property [i e., the remaining property of a single landowner whose land was taken], without inquiry in any form as to the special benefits received by the owner, the result will be more injurious to the owner than if he had been required in the first instance to open the street at his own cost, without compensation in respect of the land taken for the street; for, by opening the street at his own cost, he might save at least the expense attending formal proceedings of condemnation. It cannot be that any such result is consistent with the principles upon which rests the power to make special assessments upon property, in order to meet the expense of public improvements in the vicinity of such property.

Almost ten years before Norwood v. Baker, supra, was decided, the court of last resort in Kentucky held, in Covington v. Worthington, 88 Ky. 206, 10 S. W. 790, 11 S. W. 1038, that when private property is taken under the power of eminent domain by a city for a street, the other property of the owner fronting on the street thus opened may be required to pay its due proportion of the cost of opening and improving the street, according to the number of feet fronting on the street, just as other property is taxed.

According to the court in that case, it is not a valid objection to a special tax imposed according to frontage upon the property of a landowner whose remaining land has been condemned for a new street, that the burden exceeds in amount the money value received by him for the land condemned. The case is in such direct conflict with the later decision in Norwood v. Baker, supra, that it ought no longer to be deemed an authority.

The case of Bloomington v. Latham, 142 Ill. 462, 18 L.R.A. 487, 32 N. E. 506, was on all fours with Norwood v. Baker, supra. It involved the condemnation of land for a new street, and an assessment of the value of the land taken and of the damage to the remaining land, together with the entire cost of the proceedings, upon other land of the same owners abutting on that taken for the new street. A majority of the Illinois supreme court concluded that this operation was, to all intents and purposes, an unconstitutional taking of private property for public use without making just compensation, and annulled the assessment.

The case of Norfolk v. Chamberlain, 89 Va. 196, 16 S. E. 730, was also strikingly like that of Norwood v. Baker, supra, and the conclusion was the same. In the Virginia case, Chamberlain owned a vacant corner lot upon Grandby and Plume streets, and the city undertook to widen Plume street 10 feet. A strip 10 feet wide for the entire length of Chamberlain's lot was condemned, and $1,200 was awarded him as compensation. The city accepted and paid the award, and about five months later assessed the rest of the land $1,500 for peculiar benefits from the improvement, and the court held that the city had no power or authority to levy any such assessment, and accordingly adjudged it void.

Damages paid to abutting property owners for property taken for a public improvement cannot be assessed back on the abutting property, regardless of benefits conferred by the improvement. Fridman v. Norwood, 25 Ohio C. C. 258.

"You cannot," said the court in Dodsworth v. Cincinnati, 18 Ohio C. C. 288, "condemn property, and pay condemnation money, and then, under the guise of taxation, without reference to benefits, by alleging front-foot assessments, recondemn the money out of the pocket of the owner of the land." Such a proceeding violates the Constitutions, both state and Federal. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

A constitutional provision forbidding the taking of private property for public use without making compensation for it in money, and without deduction on account of benefits, forbids the assessing back, upon the remaining lands of the same owner, the cost of taking property for the purpose of a public street. Cincinnati, L. & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 62 Ohio St. 465, 49 L.R.A. 566, 57 N. E. 229.

The case of Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 303, in which the contrary had been held, was declared unsound and expressly overruled by this decision.

This court, said Sherwin, J., in delivering the opinion of the Iowa supreme court in Iowa Pipe & Tile Co. v. Callanan, 125 Iowa, 358, 67 L.R.A. 408, 106 Am. St. Rep. 311, 101 N. W. 141, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 7, has uniformly upheld the frontage rule of assessment regardless of the special benefit to the property, and were it not for the controlling force of Norwood v. Baker, supra, we should perhaps feel bound to follow the rule in this case. It should be said, however, that in no case involving this question upon which we have heretofore passed have the facts been similar to these before us now, and hence we have never before been called upon to determine the precise question involved here. "The assessment in this case is so manifestly unequal and unjust, and is so clearly governed by the rule announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in Norwood v. Baker, supra, that we are constrained to hold it invalid."

The principle which controlled in Norwood v. Baker, supra, came into play and was applied once more in Martin v. District of Columbia, 205 U. S. 135, 51 L. ed. 743, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440, in which the Supreme Court of the United States held that, by the acts of Congress authorizing alleys to be opened or widened through squares in Washington, District of Columbia, and providing for an apportionment and assessment of the cost of the land taken for the improvement, and of the expense of the proceedings, upon the property lying within the squares through which the alleys ran, such apportionment and assessment must in any event be limited to the extent of the resulting benefit. In that case assessments of $650 and $550 gross, respectively, were laid upon what was left of two abutting lots from which strips of land were taken to widen an alley, and which lots were worth, after the shearing, if the valuation of the land appropriated should be the criterion, at most, $368 and $300, respectively. The circumstances were such as to compel the court greatly to limit its previous decisions in Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966, and Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 45 L. ed. 900, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616. The task was assigned to and performed by Mr. Justice Holmes.

In view of the decisions to which we have referred, said he, it would be unfortunate if the present act should be declared unconsti-stitutional, after it has stood so long. We think that, without a violent construction of the statute, it may be read in such a way as not to raise the difficult question with which we have been concerned. It is true that the jury is to apportion an amount equal to the amount of the damage ascertained, but it is to apportion it "according as each lot or part of lot of land in such square may be benefited by the opening," etc. Very likely it was thought that in general, having regard to the shortness of the alleys, the benefits would be greater than the cost. But the words quoted permit, if they do not require, the interpretation that in any event the apportionment is to be limited to the benefit, and, if it is so limited, all serious doubt as to the validity of the statute disappears.

The case of Norwood v. Baker, supra, has several times been distinguished, and is now regarded as strictly limited to cases in the same class. The Supreme Court of the United States had occasion almost as soon as it had been promulgated, to explain and limit the decision. In French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625, Mr. Justice Shiras, speaking for the majority of the court, referred to the contention that the decision in Norwood v. Baker, supra, had established the principle that the cost of a local improvement could not constitutionally be assessed against abutting property according to its frontage, without a preliminary hearing concerning the benefits to result to the property assessed, and declared that such is not the necessary and legal import of the decision. That, said he, was a case where, by a village ordinance apparently aimed at a single person, a portion of whose property was condemned for a street, the entire cost of opening the street, including not only the full amount paid for the strip condemned, but the cost and expenses of the condemnation, was thrown upon the abutting property of the person whose land was condemned. This appeared, he added, both to the court below, and to a majority of the judges of this court, to be an abuse of the law, an act of confiscation, and not a valid exercise of the taxing power. It may be conceded, he continued, that courts of equity are always open to afford a remedy where there is an attempt, under the guise of legal proceedings, to deprive a person of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law. And such, in the opinion of a majority of the judges of this court, was the nature and effect of the proceedings in the case of Norwood v. Baker, supra.

The case was again distinguished by the New York court of appeals in Conde v. Schenectady, 164 N. Y. 258, 58 N. E. 130, by saying that, in the former case, the improvement was for the opening of a street through the plaintiff's lands, in which she was undoubtedly entitled to compensation for the land taken, and the right to which she could not be constitutionally denied. The same statute authorized the local authorities to assess the cost of the improvement and the expense of the proceeding upon the remaining lands of the plaintiff, according to frontage and regardless of benefit. The effect of this double proceeding of eminent domain and taxation, said the New York court, was that the plaintiff lost her land without compensation, and was compelled to pay the expense of having it taken away from her, and these provisions of the law were held to violate the Federal Constitution; but in the present case no land is taken from the plaintiff. The proceeding is purely an exercise of the power of taxation. The land abutting on the street is benefited by the pavement or repavement, and should bear the expense. Even where no provision is made by law for the apportionment of such expense according to the frontage of the land abutting on the street, the equity of the principle is so apparent that the rule has been almost universally adopted in the municipalities of this state. The case, therefore, differs from the opening of a street or avenue, the main object of which improvement may, in special cases, be not to benefit the abutting land, but to afford access and communication between separate parts of the city or village, and thus inure to the advantage of the whole municipality.

In Job v. Alton, 189 Ill. 256, 82 Am. St. Rep. 448, 59 N. E. 622, the court held the decision inapplicable to the case of a special tax for constructing a sidewalk under the Illinois statute of 1875, levied proportionally to the lot frontage on the line of the work. The court explained that an ordinance adopted by authority of that statute was a determination by the municipality that the tax did not substantially exceed the benefits conferred, and that although that determination was conclusive upon the taxpayer and the courts, and the former was afforded no opportunity to be heard upon the question of benefits anywhere, nevertheless the ordinance, to be valid, must be just and reasonable, and, if not so, would be vacated by the courts, which was sufficient protection to the property owner from oppression.

In Hadley v. Dagne, 130 Cal. 207, 62 Pac. 500, the court distinguished the decision in two respects, viz., that the assessment in that case was for the cost of land and the proceedings to condemn it in opening a new street, and not for the improvement of an existing street; and that the laws under which it was made required such assessments to be made according to benefits conferred; whereas the statute in the case at bar required assessments for improving existing streets to be apportioned according to frontage on the line of improvement.

"In no portion of the opinion" in Norwood v. Baker, supra, said the California court, "is it intimated that an assessment for the improvement of an existing street upon the lands abutting thereon according to their frontage, within a district designated or prescribed by legislative authority, is invalid; nor did the court question the correctness of any of its previous decisions, many of which are cited in the opinion, in which assessments under such a rule had been sustained."

The decision in Norwood v. Baker, supra, was at first widely accepted as a sweeping condemnation of the front-foot rule of assessment in every case in which it should be used arbitrarily without regard to the benefits conferred upon the assessed property. And when it was subsequently limited in French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. supra, there was much bewilderment.

In Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Lindquist, 119 Iowa, 144, 93 N. W. 103, the assessment was made for the construction of a storm sewer and laid upon the abutting lots according to the front-foot rule. The trial court, relying upon and following the case of Norwood v. Baker, supra, held that the statute authorizing that mode of assessment was unconstitutional in reversing this judgment. The supreme court said that the case had been subsequently explained and a contrary conclusion reached.

The court, in Scranton v. Levers, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 176, and Williamsport v. Lloyd, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 735, entertained the opinion that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided in that case that an assessment of the entire cost of a public improvement upon abutting property, by the front-foot rule, without reference to special benefits, was in contravention of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, and therefore void, and that consequently the decision of the Pennsylvania supreme court in Michener v. Philadelphia, 118 Pa. 535, 12 Atl. 174, was to be deemed overruled.

It was asserted by McClellan, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 638, 37 So. 291, that this court had put itself in harmony with the doctrine of the constitutional validity of a statute assessing the total cost of such a street improvement as paving, laying sidewalks, or building a sewer upon the line property, by the front-foot rule, without considering resulting benefits, in the case of Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461, 8 L.R.A. 369, 7 So. 386, and had so remained, if, said he, "we leave out of view some wabbling in dicta superinduced by what we supposed, what was generally supposed, and what three of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States yet believe, was the effect of that court's decision in the case of Norwood v. Baker, supra."

It is difficult, said Knowlton, Ch. J., of the Massachusetts supreme court in White v. Gove, 183 Mass. 333, 67 N. E. 359, to understand what is the exact meaning of the majority of the court in French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. supra, and in the cases that follow it; for they seemingly affirm Norwood v. Baker, supra, and distinguish it from the cases then decided. In many state Constitutions, the authority given to the legislative body to enact laws establishing taxation is general, while in others, as in this commonwealth, the Constitution gives authority only "to impose and levy proportional and reasonable assessments, rates, and taxes." Whether in the later cases the Supreme Court of the United States was considering statutes founded on general legislative authority, while in the earlier case of Norwood v. Baker, supra, they assumed that the power was limited to the enactment of laws authorizing only such taxes as are proportional and reasonable, and whether the seeming difference between the earlier decision and the later decisions is due to that fact, we need not consider. Questions in regard to the constitutionality of laws relating to taxes have frequently arisen in this commonwealth, and the test has always been whether the tax was proportional and reasonable.

In State v. Robert P. Lewis Co. (Ramsey County v. Robert P. Lewis Co.) 72 Minn. 87, 42 L.R.A. 639, 75 N. W. 108, it was held that, under constitutional provisions peculiar to the state, respecting assessments for local improvements and authorizing frontage taxes, an act of the legislature empowering the city of St. Paul to levy an annual tax or assessment upon the lineal foot of lands abutting on the line of water mains to defray the expense of laying the conduits, was valid. Inasmuch, however, as the assessment in the particular case had not been properly computed, a modification of the figures was required.

In the subsequent case of State v. Robert P. Lewis Co. (Ramsey County v. Robert P. Lewis Co.) 82 Minn. 390, 53 L.R.A. 421, 85 N. W. 207, 86 N. W. 611,—a controversy over the same tax in a later year,—the question of conformity to the state Constitution was deemed to have been settled by the prior decision; the tax, however, was assailed as a violation of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution. and Norwood v. Baker, supra, was invoked as authority for its unconstitutionality. Prior to the appearance of that case, said the court in its first opinion, perhaps the trend of the decisions in this country was in support of the theory that the legislative power in respect of special assessments was practically unlimited, and since that case was decided the state courts have not been agreed as to its scope and meaning. Probably no decision emanating from the Federal Supreme Court, for many years, has been so sweeping and at the same time so imperfectly understood and applied. Upon the authority of that decision the court at first concluded that the statute before it was unconstitutional, because it provided for the application arbitrarily of the front-foot rule of assessment, regardless of or greatly in excess of resulting benefits to the assessed property, and thus in effect deprived the owner without due process of law of his estate, and under the guise of taxation appropriated private property to the public use without compensation.

The court, however, found its position in view of French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 625, untenable, and granted a re-argument (vide, 82 Minn. 402, 53 L.R.A. 421, 85 N. W. 207, 86 N. W. 611).

In the final opinion, receding from its former position and affirming the validity of the assessment, it was said: The decision formerly reached by this court was based wholly upon what were believed to be the principles announced in the case of Norwood v. Baker, supra. . . . But in the case of French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. supra, and other cases concurrently decided, the Federal Supreme Court has attempted to qualify and limit those principles as applied in Norwood v. Baker. While it does not appear that the court has directly denied the soundness of the rule announced, yet the purpose seems to be, in its later expressions, to hold that the principle will not apply when in conflict with the systems of taxation as adopted by a state, unless, in some special case, peculiar and extraordinary hardship is the result. In other words, it is not the principle or rule of assessment which is the test of the validity of the state act, but rather the effect of the application of the rule in particular cases. It may be a sound rule in one case, and not in another. It would be useless at this time to further attempt to define the position of the Federal court as expressed in its later decisions. It is sufficient to say that we are in doubt as to the effect of its holdings. Our state Constitution authorizes the special assessments provided by the statute, and such statute has been held valid, under the constitutional provision, by this court in State v. Robert P. Lewis Co. (Ramsey County v. Robert P. Lewis Co.) 72 Minn. 87, 42 L.R.A. 639, 75 N. W. 108.

The court adhered to this in the later case of State v. Macalester College, 87 Minn. 165, 91 N. W. 484.

The opinions held by this court, it was said in the opinion in State v. Robert P. Lewis Co. supra, where the validity of the water-frontage tax was after full consideration determined, dispose of the questions again presented on this appeal. Subsequent decisions of the highest Federal court in the land, it was added, have to some extent complicated the subject, but, if we are able to comprehend the result we are required to adopt, this statute should be upheld.

XVIII. The landowner's right to notice and a hearing.

The doctrine is held by some courts that a landowner is no more entitled to notice and a hearing in respect of an assessment upon his property to defray the cost of a local improvement than he is in respect of a general tax to meet the expenses of government. The greater number of the courts, however, hold the contrary.

A statute authorizing the assessment of the cost of a street pavement upon abutting property on the front-foot plan is not open to the objection of unconstitutionality as depriving the citizen of property without 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

due process of law, merely because it does not provide for a hearing and review. Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L.R.A. 646, 76 N. W. 242; Roberts v. First Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 504, 79 N. W. 1049.

When a statute authorizes a municipality to assess the cost of a street improvement upon abutting property on the line of the work in proportion to its frontage, the making of the assessment is a mere matter of measurement and arithmetical computation, and it is not essential to its validity that the assessed property owner should have notice of the proceeding and an opportunity to be heard upon the question of its amount. Amery v. Keokuk, 72 Iowa, 701, 30 N. W. 780.

When the designation of the lands to be benefited by a local improvement is intrusted to commissioners, the owners may be entitled to notice and a hearing upon the question whether their lands are benefited and how much, according to a majority of the court in Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921. But the legislature has the power to determine, by the statute imposing the tax, what lands which might be benefited by the improvement are in fact benefited; and if it does so, its determination is conclusive upon the owners and the courts, and the owners have no right to be heard upon the question whether their lands are benefited or not, but only upon the validity of the assessment and its apportionment among the different parcels of the class which the legislature has conclusively decided to be benefited.

As a property owner can never be heard to say that in point of fact his property has not been benefited by a local improvement, in opposition to the declaration of the assessing authorities that it has been, the theory upon which the validity of special assessments rests, viz., that of special benefit to the assessed property as a result of the improvement, is one he never can practically apply. Seibert v. Tiffany, 8 Mo. App. 33; Allen v. Krenning, 23 Mo. App. 561.

The general principle of law that no person shall be bound by proceedings of a judicial nature affecting his person or his property without having an opportunity to be heard applies to cases of assessment for municipal street improvements. State, Mann, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. L. 662.

A landowner whose property is to be subjected to a special assessment must be accorded an opportunity to be heard in regard to it. Arnold v. Knoxville, 115 Tenn. 195, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 837, 90 S. W. 409, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 881.

The owners of property charged with the cost of a local improvement are entitled to be heard upon the question of benefits. Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L.R.A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484, 57 N. E. 114; Martin v. Wills, 157 Ind. 153, 60 N. E. 1021.

An opportunity to a landowner to appear and contest the legality, justice, and accuracy of a proposed assessment against his property to defray any part of the expense of a local improvement, at some stage of the proceedings before the assessment becomes final, is a constitutional right. Viollett v. Alexandria, 92 Va. 501, 31 L.R.A. 382, 53 Am. St. Rep. 825, 23 S. E. 909; Heth v. Radford, 93 Va. 272, 31 S. E. 8; Norfolk v. Young, 97 Va. 729, 47 L.R.A. 574, 34 S. E. 886.

The owner of vacant land assessed by a city for water rates, at an arbitrary figure, is entitled at some stage of the proceedings to notice and an opportunity to be heard; and if the statute under which the assessment is laid gives no right to such notice, and affords no opportunity for a hearing before the body empowered to impose such assessment, it is unconstitutional and void. Remsen v. Wheeler, 105 N. Y. 573, 12 N. E. 564; Re Union College, 129 N. Y. 308, 29 N. E. 460; Re Flower, 129 N. Y. 643, 41 N. Y. S. R. 644, 29 N. E. 463.

"I am of the opinion," said Earl, J., in delivering the unanimous opinion of the New York court of appeals in Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289, "that the Constitution sanctions no law imposing such an assessment [i. e., for the opening, preparing, grading, and regulating of a new street] without a notice to, and a hearing or an opportunity of a hearing by, the owners of the property to be assessed. It is enough that the owners may by chance have notice, or that they may, as a matter of favor, have a hearing. The law must require notice to them, and give them the right to a hearing and an opportunity to be heard. It matters not, upon the question of the constitutionality of such a law, that the assessment has in fact been fairly apportioned. The constitutional validity of law is to be tested not by what has been done under it, but by what may by its authority be done. The legislature may prescribe the kind of notice and the mode in which it shall be given, but it cannot dispense with all notice."

The Massachusetts statute of 1897, chap. 420, entitled "An Act Relative to the Sewerage Works of the City of Boston," was held unconstitutional in the case of Sears v. Street Comrs. 173 Mass. 350, 53 N. E. 876, because, first, it undertook to give the street commissioners power to levy special assessments on real estate upon other grounds than the receipt of special benefits, and for amounts in excess of special benefits, if any there were, and because, also, it gave the property owners no opportunity to be heard upon their liability to such assessments.

Although a statute providing arbitrarily for assessments of the cost of public improvements upon abutting property by the front-foot rule may be unconstitutional, nevertheless, one that provides for a prima facie application only of such rule, subject to a review and alteration of the assessment by local officials upon the basis of special benefits to accrue from the improvement to the assessed property, and by which it is the bounden duty of the local authorities to adjust assessments to correspond to such special benefits, is a valid exercise of the legislative power. Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 48 L. ed. 195, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88.

It is now too well settled to require a discussion of the general proposition, said the court in Butler v. Worcester, 112 Mass. 541, that a statute authorizing the cost of local improvements, such as the construction of a sewer system, to be levied by assessment upon the estate thereby benefited, according to the judgment of the municipal authorities in the first instance, and allowing to any party aggrieved by their estimate the right to have it revised by a jury, is within the constitutional power of the legislature.

If an assessment or tax laid upon property fronting upon a street improvement for the cost of such improvement, in proportion to the frontage, is, by the statute authorizing the charge, made subject to correction in conformity with the amount of special benefits conferred by the improvement upon the assessed property, after the property owner has been afforded a fair opportunity to present evidence upon that question, the assessment is valid. Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L.R.A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484, 57 N. E. 114; Indianapolis v. Holt, 155 Ind. 222, 57 N. E. 966, 988, 1100; Taylor v. Crawfordsville, 155 Ind. 403, 58 N. E. 490; Martin v. Wills, 157 Ind. 153, 60 N. E. 1021.

The mere fact that the cost of a street improvement is ordained to be assessed and apportioned upon abutting property according to its frontage does not of itself invalidate an assessment, when the statute under which the ordinance was adopted requires and provides for a hearing upon the question of special benefits, and a correction of the assessment in conformity with the result of such hearing. McKee v. Pendleton, 102 Ind. 667, 69 N. E. 997.

An assessment for the cost of a street improvement upon abutting property according to its frontage is valid, where the statute authorizing the improvement and assessment affords the owners of the assessed property an opportunity to be heard before the city council upon the question of special benefits, and requires such council or other municipal body to adjust the assessment so as to conform to the special benefits accruing to the assessed property. Voris v. Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. 163 Ind. 592, 70 N. E. 249.

An assessment for the cost of a street improvement upon the abutting property in proportion to its frontage is valid, where the assessing authorities have the power, upon a hearing to which the property owners are entitled, to alter or change the assessment so as to make it conform to the special benefits received by the assessed property from the improvement. Pitts- burgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taber, 168 Ind. 419, 77 N. E. 740, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 808.

When property owners are by law given an opportunity to appear and be heard upon the question of assessing their property according to the benefits it receives from a public street improvement, a timely and seasonable offer upon their part to prove by competent testimony facts which show an assessment complained of to have been made upon the basis of frontage on the street, without regard to benefit or proportionate benefit, and without regard to the form or position of any of the parcels of land, if rejected, and the proof not admitted, constitutes such an error as will vitiate the assessment. State ex rel. Cunningham v. District Ct. 20 Minn. 62, 11 N. W. 133.

A finding by a city council sitting as a board of equalization, at which property owners are by statute entitled to appear and be heard upon the question of benefits to their property from a local improvement, that all the real estate on which special assessments are levied is specially benefited, and shall be assessed for the cost of the construction of a sewer according to the feet frontage, is not so fatally defective as a finding of uniformity and equality of benefits as to render a special assessment void upon a collateral attack. John v. Connell, 71 Neb. 10, 98 N. W. 457.

In Baltimore v. Scharf, 54 Md. 499, the court, although declaring it to be well settled that where naught to the contrary appears in a municipal ordinance directing the paving or repaving of a city street, and charging the cost or part of the cost upon property along the line of the work, the presumption is that the corporation decided the improvement to be so far beneficial to the property and its owners that they ought to pay the proportion of the cost of it with which they are charged, and that such decision will be held in the courts to be an adjudication of that question, nevertheless annulled such an assessment upon the ground that the property owners had been given no notice or opportunity to be heard before the assessment was laid, and therefore that it was void for want of due process of law.

After this decision was announced a motion for a reargument was made and granted. At the same time the same questions arose and were discussed in Baltimore v. John Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1, and the argument of that case was treated by the court as a reargument of the former case. In the latter case a majority of the judges reached a different conclusion, and held the ordinance and assessment valid. The reasoning of the court to sustain this conclusion was in substance as follows: The question whether a local improvement will benefit a particular district rests in the judgment of the mayor and city council, whose determination is final and conclusive. The law has provided for no appeal from that determination, and the courts have no power to review it. The courts may only pass 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) upon the naked question of power, and the validity of special assessments founded on the theory of special benefits has been so often and uniformly sustained that such question is no longer open. No abuse of power has been made out. The objection that no notice was given to property owners, or opportunity to them to be heard, so that due process of law was lacking, is founded on a misapprehension of the nature of the power granted by the legislature and exercised by the municipal corporation. The authorizing statute requires no notice. The imposition of an assessment of this sort is an exercise of the taxing power, and not of the power of eminent domain. To hold notice to taxpayers essential to the validity of a law imposing a tax, so that courts can intervene and set the tax aside or stay the collection of it because no notice was given or provided for, would be as much an anomaly in jurisprudence as in legislation.

The formal overruling of Baltimore v. Scharf, supra, is reported in 56 Md. 50.

In Moale v. Baltimore, 61 Md. 224, it was contended that another paving ordinance was void because, first, the statutory prescriptions had not been strictly pursued; second, because the power to assess had been illegally delegated to a subordinate officer; and, last, because the front-foot rule of assessment had been applied; but the court observed that the ordinances upheld in the preceding cases were so nearly identical with that attacked in the case at bar that it would seem that those cases ought to be conclusive against all the objections alleged as invalidating the latter.

In Alberger v. Baltimore, 64 Md. 1, 20 Atl. 958, another ordinance providing for regrading and repaving a city street, and assessing the abutting property to pay for the work, was attacked. The objections made most prominent against the assessments went to the constitutionality of the ordinance under which they were laid and attempted to be enforced. It was objected that the ordinance neither provided for notice nor opportunity to the property owner to be heard before the assessment was made and enforced, and hence was an attempt to appropriate the property of the citizen without due process of law. This constitutional objection was not argued, doubtless, according to the court, for the reason that the question was regarded as definitely settled by the majority opinions in the above cases. The principles held by the majority of the court, in those cases, would seem, said the court, to be quite conclusive of the constitutional question raised, and the objection must therefore be overruled.

Although each of the foregoing cases was decided by a divided court, the question seemed to be at rest.

In the case of Ulman v. Baltimore, 72 Md. 587, 11 L.R.A. 224, 20 Atl. 141, 21 Atl. 709, the attack upon the constitutionality of ordinances of this class, in which the property owner was afforded no chance to be heard before his property was charged with an arbitrary assessment laid according to the front-foot rule, was renewed and proved successful. The court, again dividing, held in that case that an assessment for repaving a city street, apportioned according to the number of front feet upon the abutting property, and made, pursuant to municipal ordinances, without notice to the owners of the assessed property and without opportunity for them to appear and be heard, constitutes a deprivation of property without due process of law, and is unconstitutional and void.

The identical question arising on the record now before us, said McSherry, J., in delivering the opinion of the majority in the case just cited, has been passed upon by this court on several occasions, but is now presented distinctively as a Federal question. When, he continued, the validity of ordinance No. 98 of 1876, passed by the mayor and city council of Baltimore under the act of 1874 (chap. 218), was assailed in Baltimore v. Scharf, supra, a majority of the judges who heard that case declared the ordinance void because, among other reasons, it failed to provide for notice to and a hearing of the owners of property bounding on the street directed to be repaved. This municipal legislation was held to be repugnant to the organic law because in effect it took the property of the individual without due process of law,—without giving him an opportunity to be heard before or after the imposition of the tax. A motion for a reargument was made and granted, and three of the five judges who heard it reversed the former ruling, and held the ordinance to be free from constitutional objections. The same result was reached by the same bare majority in Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, supra, and the ruling was followed in Moale v. Baltimore and Alberger v. Baltimore, supra. Taking up the terms of the ordinance, Judge McSherry, pointed out that neither the statute under which it was passed, nor any other law or by-law, nor the ordinance itself, made the slightest provision for giving notice to the owners of the assessed property from beginning to end. The entire proceeding, said he, beginning with the act of assembly and ending with the imposition of a lien upon the property, was purely ex parte. No opportunity whatever was given to resist the exaction, either by allowing a hearing before the imposition of the tax, or providing for an appeal to a court of law afterwards. The first process served upon the citizen was a peremptory demand for the payment of a burdensome lien — a judgment in rem and in personam — imposed by a municipal corporation without summons or notice or warning, and without even an opportunity to appeal. If, he added, this be “due process of law,” the provisions of the Federal and State Constitutions, and of Magna Charta itself, are utterly meaningless and void. After examining the authorities in point Judge McSherry concluded that the necessary result was that the court must return to the doctrine laid down in Scharf's Case, in 54 Md. 499, and recede from the opinion overruling that case and asserting the opposite view. Afterwards a reargument of this case was denied.

In Baltimore v. Stewart, 92 Md. 533, 48 Atl. 165, it was held that the front-foot rule of apportionment of the cost of an assessment for repaving a city street is not in and of itself unlawful and void, provided that, before it is put in operation and the assessment made under it is final and conclusive upon the property owner, he has an opportunity to appear and be heard upon the amount of his assessment before somebody, officer or tribunal, authorized to correct and to alter the charge, if inequitable and unjust. Concerning the rule, the court said (p. 552): Now, as to the front-foot rule of apportionment of the cost of the improvement: Prior to the act of 1874, chap. 218, the front-foot rule was prescribed by statute, and had prevailed between 1782 and 1860 under various acts of the assembly, and from 1860 until 1874 under §§ 845 and 847 of Act 4, Code Public Local Laws. The repeal of these last-named sections by the act of 1874 abrogated this rule of apportionment so far as it had been established by legislative enactment, but no further, and the act of 1874 gave to the city an unqualified discretion to adopt by ordinance the same or any other rule by which to ascertain the amount to be paid by each abutting proprietor. Under this power the general ordinance established, or rather re-established, the front-foot rule. The validity of that rule has been recognized by this court in a number of cases since the act of 1874 was adopted. Without referring to all of them, we name Alberger's Case, 64 Md. 1, 20 Atl. 988. What was said in Ulman's Case, 72 Md. 594, 11 L.R.A. 224, 20 Atl. 141, 21 Atl. 709, of the arbitrary character of that rule had relation to the question then before us, — not the validity of the rule, but the hardship of its application to a case where the party charged with the payment of the assessment has had no opportunity to be heard. It may be well to note in passing that the Ulman Case overruled previous cases only in so far as those cases had held that notice and an opportunity to be heard were unnecessary to the validity of such an ordinance; and the effect of overruling those cases was to reassert the doctrine in Scharf's Case, supra. The case at bar is different from Ulman's Case, because here ample provision was made for giving all parties interested an opportunity to be heard before the ordinance was passed, and therefore to contest the application or adaptation of the front-foot rule to this particular paving, if they saw fit to antagonize the rule.

XIX. The proper method of assessing according to the front-foot rule.

When a rule of apportionment of the cost of a street improvement by frontage is adopted by municipal ordinance, then each lot, piece, or parcel of land is required to bear its proportion of the whole sum to be raised by the special tax in the ratio its frontage bears to the whole frontage upon the improvement. Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L.R.A. 563, 33 N. E. 888.

When special taxes for local improvements are laid in proportion to frontage, the entire cost of the improvement for which the assessment is made should be ascertained, and each piece of land charged in the proportion its frontage bears to that of all the land abutting on the line of the improvement. Ware v. Jerseyville, 158 Ill. 234, 41 N. E. 736.

A uniform and equal assessment upon abutting property for the cost of paving a street, made by the front-foot rule, results from dividing the whole cost of the work among the total property frontage; and any particular lot is not entitled to a reduction of assessment by reason of the fact that the pavement in front of it was less in area than the pavement in other parts of the street. Philadelphia v. Gorgas, 180 Pa. 296, 38 Atl. 868; Scranton v. Koehler, 200 Pa. 126, 49 Atl. 792.

To justify an assessment upon the property benefited by a street improvement, laid according to frontage, if such property is proportionally benefited by such improvement, it is not essential that any work be done directly in front of the particular piece of property assessed. Strickland v. Stillwater, 63 Minn. 43, 65 N. W. 131.

A municipal ordinance that provides for a levy, upon contiguous property, of the whole cost of an improvement, but only to the extent of the cost of such improvement in front of any particular lot or parcel of land assessed, does not impose a special tax upon contiguous property, but arbitrarily lays a burden upon each lot of making the improvement in front of it. Davis v. Litchfield, supra.

When the statute requires the cost of a street improvement to be apportioned among the owners of abutting lots in the ratio of the front feet of the respective parcels, the cost of the work done in front of each lot cannot be taken as the measure of the liability of the owner of that particular lot. Kerr v. Owensboro, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 863.

A statute chartering a city, and providing that the expense of improving the streets in such city shall be charged to and paid by the lots fronting on such street, affords no authority for the assessment of such expense upon the lots fronting upon the work, specifically lot by lot, work done opposite or fronting on each specific lot being assessed upon that lot alone; and an assessment by such method is void. Weller v. St. Paul, 5 Minn. 95, Gil. 70; Morrison v. St. Paul, 5 Minn. 108, Gil. 83.

When a statute provides that the cost of a street improvement shall be apportioned and charged to the adjacent property according to the front-feet of each owner, a proper construction of the law requires that the amount shall be apportioned and charged to each lot separately, according to its respective front, and not that the assessment shall be made and the property charged for work done on its front. Property must bear its just proportion, according to its frontage, of the cost of the whole work. St. Louis use of McGrath v. Clemens, 49 Mo. 552.

The requirement of a statute that, in making local assessments for street improvements, each lot shall be charged in proportion to its frontage, does not contemplate that the work in front of each lot shall necessarily be charged to that lot, but that the amount of the whole work shall be ascertained, and each lot shall be charged in the proportion that its frontage bears to that of all the lots assessed. Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 525; Weber v. Schergens, 59 Mo. 389.

A statute requiring the cost of the construction of a sidewalk to be apportioned among the several abutting lots according to frontage means that the cost of the whole walk shall be apportioned; and an assessment of any particular lot for the exact cost of the work immediately in front of it is void. Adams v. Green, 74 Mo. App. 125.

If in distributing the cost of a street improvement upon the abutting property, the accruing benefits to the lots charged are the same percentage of their respective values for both corner lots and inside lots, a grossly disproportionate charge upon the corner lots in comparison with the interior ones will invalidate the tax or assessment. Downer's Grove v. Findlay, 237 Ill. 368, 86 N. E. 732.

Under a municipal charter providing that the entire expense of street improvements shall be assessed upon and paid by the lands benefited, in proportion to the benefits received, an assessment which the report of the commissioners shows to have been made by calculating the amount of earth deposited in front of the lot assessed, at the price paid by the contractor for the work, and assessing it upon such lot, is not warranted by the law, and is invalid, and will not sustain a title resting upon a sale of the lot for the nonpayment of the assessment. State, Baxter, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 36 N. J. L. 188.

An assessment for a street improvement, laid upon each abutting lot or part of lot according to its frontage, for the cost of the improvement opposite, it is illegal and void, when the statute authorizing the imposition of assessments of that character requires the work to be taken as a whole, and the whole cost thereof to be equalized and divided among the various parcels of land assessed to pay for it. State ex rel. Christopher v. Portage, 12 Wis. 563.

The court, in Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 274, was divided upon the question of the constitutionality of a provision in the city charter authorizing the common council to cause the streets to be paved and graded, and assess the whole expense thereof in front of any particular lot to the centre of the street upon such lot, and then making the assessment a lien upon the premises until paid, and a personal charge against the owner; but the net result was adverse to the validity of the assessment in the particular case.

The cost of a lateral sewer connection between abutting property and the main sewer in the street may lawfully be assessed in total upon the property thus connected. Van Wagoner v. Paterson, 67 N. J. L. 455, 51 Atl. 922.

An assessment upon unimproved land, according to the front-foot rule, of the entire cost of a street extension leading to and through it, including planking which stops a thousand feet away, is not so manifestly unjust that it can be judicially pronounced void as a denial of due process of law, where there are circumstances attending the situation of the land and the relations of the landowner respecting the improvement, and in the nature and character of the work itself and its advantages, which are conceivably consistent with the fairness of such assessment. Seattle v. Kelleher, 195 U. S. 351, 49 L. ed. 232, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44.

An assessment authorized by statute to be laid upon abutting property according to its frontage, for the grading and paving of a street, and required by statute to be equal, is not objectionable on the score of inequality, when landowners opposite a public common are required to meet the cost of paving the entire street in front of their property, while the owners of other property are required to meet the cost of pavement only to the middle of the street. McGonigle v. Allegheny, 44 Pa. 118.

XX. Estoppel of landowner.

A landowner by consent may waive, or by such conduct as operates as an estoppel in pais may preclude himself from taking advantage of, a constitutional provision limiting special assessments for local improvements to the benefits conferred upon the assessed property. Thornton v. Cincinnati, 26 Ohio C. C. 33; Murphy v. Sims, 27 Ohio C. C. 825; Frampton v. Sims, 14 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 271.

A landowner, by his conduct and his consent, may estop himself from disputing his liability for an assessment upon his property, even where it has been held to be unconstitutional in respect of other landowners who had not estopped themselves, and whose property was similarly situated. Bidwell v. Pittsburgh, 85 Pa. 412, 27 Am. Rep. 602; Ferson's Appeal, 96 Pa. 140; Pepser v. Philadelphia, 114 Pa. 96, 6 Atl. 899.

Landowners who have petitioned for a local improvement to be made under a statute providing for the assessment of the cost thereof by the front-foot rule upon abutting property; who have actively participated in carrying out the work; who have, from time to time as it progressed, recognized the justice of assessments made for it; and who have virtually at its completion certified that it was properly done,—are estopped from contesting the collection of the assessments notwithstanding the unconstitutionality of such statute as a denial of due process of law. Shepard v. Barron, 194 U. S. 553, 48 L. ed. 1115, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737.

A landowner who has petitioned for the repaving of a city street in front of his land, when the municipal charter confers upon the city power to do such work at the cost of abutting owners, apportioned among them according to frontage, and the city has no other power, has waived his right to object to an assessment upon his property laid according to that rule, even if the method is contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. Conde v. Schenectady, 164 N. Y. 258, 58 N. E. 130.

An assessment for a local improvement is valid, notwithstanding errors and irregularities in the method adopted for apportioning it, or even an unauthorized method, if the owners of the property charged, having full and fair opportunity to do so, do not object to the assessments. State ex rel. Duluth v. District Ct. 61 Minn. 542, 64 N. W. 190.

Although a statute, in requiring a municipal council to find affirmatively that the benefits conferred upon assessed property by a local improvement are equal and uniform throughout in respect of all the property assessed, is mandatory in order that an assessment according to the foot frontage be valid, nevertheless an assessed property owner, who is given by the statute an opportunity to be heard upon the question of benefits to his property, and to obtain a modification of the assessment made thereon, and who neglects to avail himself of that opportunity, cannot afterwards maintain an action to enjoin the collection of the assessment. Morse v. Omaha, 67 Neb. 424, 93 N. W. 734.

XXI. Conclusion.

It is no longer disputed that the imposition of special assessments to defray the cost of local improvements is to be referred to the taxing power, and it is axiomatic in American constitutional law that the taxing power of the state is unlimited save by explicit provisions in the organic law.

Neither the ordinary provisions of state Constitutions requiring equality or uniformity or both, of taxation and of ad valorem taxation, nor yet the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States in respect of due process of law and the equal protection of the laws, forbid the use of the front-foot rule in apportioning an assessment to meet the cost of a local improvement.

And although the right to assess such cost at all rests upon the theory of equivalent benefits, it is now generally conceded that constitutional provisions prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without making the owner just compensation do not operate to prevent the employment of the front-foot rule in the process of laying local assessments for local improvements.

The mere use, then, of the rule in assessing property for such a purpose is not per se unconstitutional, unless there is embodied in the fundamental law some explicit provision preventing or restricting its employment.

It is perfectly true that the expense of making a public improvement may not be assessed solely upon selected property in a limited area, except where such property actually or potentially receives from the improvement special benefits beyond those which accrue to the public at large and substantially equal to the burden imposed; but the use of the front-foot rule is not, in and of itself, inconsistent with this principle. The rule may indeed, and frequently does, fairly measure the equation of benefit and burden to the assessed property. When it does so in fact, there is certainly no valid objection to its use. When the conditions are such that all the assessed property appears to enjoy the same benefits in equal degree, the resort to the front-foot rule is prima facie justified.

This being so, the validity or invalidity of a particular assessment, when the front-foot rule has not been prescribed, or when another rule has been prescribed by Constitution or statute, does not depend upon the circumstance that the front-foot rule was employed to make the assessment, but whether there were or were not special benefits received from the improvement substantially equivalent to the assessment upon the property, and whether the burden of such assessment has been fairly and equitably distributed among the beneficiaries.

J. B. G.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 2.)

CHARLES SCHEURER, Appt.,

v.

BANNER RUBBER COMPANY, Respt.

(227 Mo. 347, 126 S. W. 1037.)

Trial — instruction — absence of evidence.

1. An instruction should not be given where there is no evidence to support it.

Servant — assumption of risk — safety devices.

2. An employee does not assume the risk of a device installed by his master to lessen the risk of injury from the machinery at which he is required to work being permitted by the employer to get out of order, unless he himself has notice of the fact that it is so out of order.

Same — aggravation of injury — master's negligence — liability.

3. A servant who assumes the risk of getting his hand caught in the machine at which he is required to work may hold his master liable for aggravation of his injury 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

by failure of a device installed to stop the machine in case of such accident to work, so that his arm is drawn into the machine and crushed.

Evidence — negligence — failure of machine to work.

4. Failure of a device installed by a master to stop machinery in case a servant becomes caught therein to work when the need of it arises is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master.

Same — frequency of tests.

5. Making tests only at intervals of two or three weeks to determine whether or not a device installed to stop machinery when employees become caught in it is in working order may be found to be negligent, where it is of delicate construction, and tests made have frequently shown it to be out of order.

(March 15, 1908.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the St. Louis Circuit Court in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kinealy & Kinealy for appellant.

Messrs. Stern & Hagerman, with Messrs. Watts, Williams, & Dines and Wm. R. Gentry, for respondent:

It is not sufficient for plaintiff merely to show that an accident happened and an injury resulted.

Beebe v. St. Louis Transit Co. 206 Mo. 421, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 760, 103 S. W. 1019; Glasscock v. Swafford Bros. Dry Goods Co. 106 Mo. App. 657, 80 S. W. 364; Hester v. Jacob Dold Packing Co. 84 Mo. App. 454; Breen v. St. Louis Cooperage Co. 50 Mo. App. 202.

The machine was perfect, and there is no complaint that any negligence of the defendant caused or contributed to cause the plaintiff to get his hand caught in the machine. Under such circumstances he assumed the risk incident to working at the machine.

Cagney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 69 Mo. 416; Manning v. Excelsior Laundry Co. 189 Mass. 231, 75 N. E. 254; Sullivan v. Simplex Electrical Co. 178 Mass. 35, 59 N. E. 645.

When the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply, before plaintiff can recover, he must show that his injury was due to a defective appliance or place to work furnished by the master, and that the defect which caused his injury was known to the master, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, would have been known to the master before the injury and for a long enough time to enable the master, by the exercise of ordinary care, to repair the defect.

Wojtylak v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 188 Mo. 281, 87 S. W. 506; Kelley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 105 Mo. App. 365, 79 S. W. 973; Krampe v. St. Louis Brewing Asso. 59 Mo. App. 277; Pavey v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 85 Mo. App. 218; Herbert v. Mound City Boot & Shoe Co. 90 Mo. App. 305; Seaboard Mfg. Co. v. Woodson, 94 Ala. 147, 10 So. 87; Wilson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 85 Ala. 273, 4 So. 701; Mobile & B. R. Co. v. Holborn, 84 Ala. 133, 4 So. 146; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Flanigan, 77 Ill. 365; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Weir, 96 Ala. 396, 11 So. 436; Burke v. National India Rubber Co. 21 R. I. 446, 44 Atl. 307.

The jury should not be allowed to attempt to guess or speculate as to how much injury would have been caused to the plaintiff if, when his fingers were caught, the safety appliance had worked properly and stopped the machine, and how much injury was caused as the result of the alleged negligence of defendant in so managing its safety brake that it did not work.

Gordon v. Reynolds' Card Mfg. Co. 47 Hun, 278; Hickey v. Taaffe, 105 N. Y. 26, 12 N. E. 286; Grizzle v. Frost, 3 Fost. & F. 622; Cagney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. and Sullivan v. Simplex Electrical Co. supra.

Burgess, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the circuit court of the city of St. Louis in favor of the defendant, in a suit for damages for personal injuries.

At the time he received his injuries, plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant, and was operating a machine known as a "shaping machine," used for working over old rubber stock, or the remains of rubber sheets out of which rubber shoe heels had been stamped. The sheet of rubber was first warmed up by passing it through a machine with heated rollers, and after being thus warmed and softened it was passed through the shaping machine. The warming machine and the shaping machine were substantially similar, the difference being that in the warming machine the rollers were heated. The machines consisted of two horizontal metal rollers, about 3½ or 4 feet long and 2 feet in diameter, which were caused to roll towards each other, the space between them at the nearest point of approach being about an inch and a half. The rollers stood about 3 feet from the floor, and the operator of the machine caused the rubber sheet to pass between them from the top, and after passing through and down, the operator reached under the roller, took hold of the projecting end of the sheet of rubber, pulled it up and around the roller nearest him, and then with his left hand pushed the middle of the sheet down between the rollers, just far enough to allow the rollers to grip the sheet, which, by the motion of the rollers, is doubled up and passed through as before. This operation was repeated until the rubber stock was thoroughly worked and in proper condition for use. There were several of these machines set in a row in the room where plaintiff was working, and at the time of the injury, a number of other employees of the company were at work in said room. The rollers on these machines were caused to revolve by a cog wheel connection with the line shaft beneath the floor and under the row of machines. An engine was in the room adjoining this room, and the line shaft from which the machines received their power was connected with the main shaft of the engine by a clutch. When the jaws of this clutch were caused to open, the power of the main shaft of the engine was no longer communicated to the line shaft, and the machines would stop, although the engine might still be running. Plaintiff had been operating these machines in defendant's factory some four or five months prior to the injury. In the room, and in connection with the machines, was a safety device or appliance called an "emergency brake," to be used in case of an accident or injury to an employee by being caught in the machinery. This emergency brake was operated by a horizontal wooden bar or lever, about 2½ inches wide and 1 inch thick, located about 6 feet above the floor and over the machine. One of these bars or levers was placed over each machine. By pulling down on said lever an electric switch was closed, and a current of electricity caused to pass through an electric lock, a certain part in which lock was thus converted into a magnet, which caused a catch to be released, permitting a heavy weight to pull open the clutch on the line shaft, which line shaft was thus disconnected from the main shaft of the engine. By means of a second electric lock, operated by the same current which passed through the lock controlling the clutch, the steam was caused to be shut off from the engine. If both electric locks were in good order when the current was caused to flow by the act of pulling down on the safety lever over the machines, both locks would operate, and thereby not only would the clutch connecting the line shaft with the main shaft be caused to open, but the steam from the engine would also be shut off. If the emergency brake, as the appliance—including lever, current, wires, and locks—was called, was in good order, the pulling down of the bar or lever over any of the machines would cause the machines to stop almost instantaneously, and the rollers would not thereafter revolve as much as 3 inches. Tacked on each side of the wooden lever over each machine was a sign reading as follows: "Don't touch this rod unless someone is caught in the machinery, or in case of severe accident. Then pull down hard on it, and the machinery will stop. Anyone who pulls this rod when it is not absolutely necessary will be discharged."

On the afternoon of February 13, 1905, the plaintiff was passing a sheet of rubber, weighing about 20 pounds, between the rollers of his shaping machine. He had passed it through the machine once, and had reached down with his right hand under the machine and taken hold of the sheet as it came through, and had pulled it up and around the roller next him. Then, with his right hand holding the top end of the rubber sheet, and his left hand against the middle, he was pressing the rubber towards the space between the rollers, when, either because the flap slipped out of his right hand and struck his left elbow, or for some other reason, the fingers of his left hand got caught, with the rubber sheet, between the rollers. As soon as plaintiff felt his fingers caught, he took hold of the emergency brake bar, which was over his machine, and pulled down on it, but it failed to operate, and he kept pulling until the bar broke. Another employee in the room, hearing him "holler," and seeing his predicament, pulled down on the emergency brake bar over his machine, but that also failed to cause the machinery to stop. Thereupon the defendant's foreman, who had seen what had happened, ran into the engine room and told the engineer to turn the steam off, but by the time this was done, and the momentum of the engine had spent itself, the plaintiff's arm had been drawn between the rollers, its whole length, and the rollers had to be pried apart before he was released. As a result of this crushing of his arm, it was necessary that same night to amputate it at the shoulder socket.

Defendant's foreman testified that the emergency brake was tested about every two weeks, and that it was not tested for "fourteen days or three weeks before it broke." The plaintiff testified that as long as he had been working there he had never seen the foreman test the brake. About three days after the injury, and before any repair or change had been made in the electrical lock controlling the clutch, the foreman was shown it by the engineer, who had taken it down. He testified that there was a part of the electrical lock broken, which break effectually prevented the lock from operating, and prevented any current from passing through it. The defendant offered no evidence, but at the close of plaintiff's case asked for an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, which was refused, and the defendant then announced that it rested. Under the instructions of the court, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiff duly filed his motion for a new trial, which was overruled, whereupon he appealed to this court.

Plaintiff contends that the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded for new trial by reason of error in the giving of certain instructions. Instructions Nos. 1 and 6 are particularly assailed. The former reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that plaintiff received the injuries testified to by him, and that, at the time he received said injuries, he was in the employ of defendant, and that in the performance of his duties as such employee he was then engaged in feeding a mass of soft rubber into and between two rollers revolving towards each other, and that said rollers were caused to so operate by means of a suitable arrangement of cog wheels working into a cog wheel upon a line shaft, which in turn was caused to operate by a clutch upon the main shaft of the engine, and that near said rollers, and for the use of the person feeding said rubber through said rollers, the defendant had placed a horizontal brake lever, which was part of an emergency brake consisting of said lever and an electric battery, wires, electric lock, and a mechanical arrangement of springs, levers, and weight, and that when said horizontal lever was pulled down it would, if all the said parts of said emergency brake were in good repair, cause said clutch to open, and thereby cause said rollers to cease revolving, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that plaintiff, while in the performance of his said duties, got the fingers of his left hand caught between said rollers, and thereupon, and before plaintiff received any injury thereby, immediately pulled down said horizontal brake lever, and that said emergency brake was out of repair in that one of the parts of said electric lock was broken, and that because of that fact the pulling down of said lever by plaintiff failed to cause said rollers to cease revolving, and that because of that fact, if you find it to be a fact, plaintiff's left arm was drawn into and between said rollers, and so badly crushed that plaintiff was compelled to, and did, have it amputated, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, would have known of such broken and out-of-repair condition of said emergency brake and electric lock, and that plaintiff, at the time he received said injuries, was exercising ordinary care in the performance of his duties, and for his own safety, then the jury will find in favor of the plaintiff." This instruction, excepting as to the words in italics, which were inserted by the court of its own motion, was asked by the plaintiff, and to the action of the court in modifying the instruction, and giving it to the jury as thus modified, the plaintiff excepted at the time and saved his exception.

The sixth instruction, complained of, is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that plaintiff, by continuing in the employ of defendant, and doing the work he was doing, assumed the risk of getting his fingers caught in between the rollers of the machine at which he was working; if, therefore, you find from the evidence that plaintiff sustained any injury by reason of so getting his fingers caught, and that he would have so sustained injury even if the safety brake had worked perfectly, then plaintiff is not entitled to recover, even though you may further find from the evidence that the injury he received was aggravated by reason of the fact that the safety brake did not stop the rollers as quickly as it was intended to do."

These two instructions, when read together and in connection with each other, in effect told the jury that the plaintiff could not recover if, before using the emergency brake, which failed to operate, he sustained any injury by reason of getting his fingers caught between the rollers; and this although the jury might find that the plaintiff was at the time exercising ordinary care in the performance of his duty, and for his own safety, and that the defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, would have known of the broken condition of the emergency brake.

Before considering the proposition whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover under the circumstances as stated, we shall first turn our attention to said instruction No. 6, which is, we think, objectionable for more than one reason, and which almost amounts to a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant, as under it we do not see how the jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff. In the first place, there is no evidence that the plaintiff did in fact sustain any injury before he used the emergency brake which was supposed to stop the machinery. The testimony simply is that plaintiff had his fingers caught between the rollers, but there is not a particle of evidence that his fingers were thereby crushed or injured, or that he received any injury of any kind, before he pulled down on the emergency bar or lever. The defendant's foreman testified that there was an inch and a half of space between the rollers, which was of course sufficient to allow the fingers of any ordinary man to go through without danger of injury to his fingers. However, at the time plaintiff's fingers were caught, he was pushing a sheet of rubber, in a folded condition, between the rollers, so that his fingers were pressed between the rubber, which was in turn, and at the same time, pressed by and between the rollers. This rubber, as the testimony shows, was soft, and there is no testimony, expert or otherwise, to show whether, if only his fingers had been caught, plaintiff would have sustained any injury. Perhaps the rubber was so soft and yielding that the pressure was not sufficient to crush or injure his fingers. This we do not know, there being no evidence in that regard. As the evidence does not show that the plaintiff received any injury prior to the time he pulled down on the emergency bar, there was nothing upon which to predicate that part of the instruction which asks the jury to find whether there was such injury, and the instruction is in that respect erroneous. The instruction is also faulty in that it tells the jury that the plaintiff "is not entitled to recover, even though you may further find from the evidence that the injury he received was aggravated by reason of the fact that the safety brake did not stop the rollers as quickly as it was intended to do." This not only assumes that plaintiff received injury before he used said safety brake, but also assumes that the safety brake did stop the rollers, although not "as quickly as it was intended to do. The evidence is that the safety or emergency brake did not operate at all, and had nothing to do with stopping the rollers, that only having been accomplished by "shutting down the engine," as the foreman expressed it. It is unnecessary to add that an instruction must have evidence to support it.

While admitting that plaintiff assumed the risk of getting his fingers caught between the rollers of the machine about which he was working, and the ordinary risks incidental to his employment, it cannot be said that he assumed the risk attendant upon the failure of this safety brake to operate, and which was placed there to diminish his risk. The defendant having set up this safety appliance for the purpose of diminishing risk, and the fact being so known to the plaintiff, there was an implied obligation on the defendant not to aggravate the plaintiff's risk by an omission to keep the appliance in condition to operate and do what it was intended and expected to do. By printed notice attached to the brake bar the plaintiff was informed that by pulling down on said bar "the machinery will stop," and he had a right to rely upon the provision made for his safety. If he knew that the appliance was out of order, and still continued to work at and about his machine, it might well be argued that he accepted the increased risk; but the fact is that he did not know it before he received the injury. Defendant's engineer, who installed the apparatus called the "emergency brake," testified that if it worked properly "the machine would stop immediately, and the circumference of the rollers would not go 3 inches after the clutch was disconnected;" so that, if the emergency brake was in condition, the plaintiff's fingers, or at most his hand, could have been caught or crushed. That would have been the utmost extent of his loss, even supposing that the space between the rollers was so narrow that his fingers or hand must necessarily be crushed if caught between the rollers.

The theory, we understand, upon which the court gave instruction No. 6 and instruction No. 1, as modified, to the jury, was that there could be no apportionment of the damages; that is to say, if the plaintiff got his hand into the machinery and suffered an injury by so doing, through his own negligence, and if the injury was increased by reason of the defect in the device for stopping the machinery, there could be no apportionment of the damages, such defect in the safety device not having caused the injury in the first place. The law is that in cases where a plaintiff sustains damages from separate and independent sources, it is the duty of the triers of the facts, although the injuries may be concurrent in point of time, to separate, as best they can from the evidence before them, the amount of damages caused by the defendant's act or negligence; and the difficulty of determining the amount of damages caused by the defendant's negligence, or of separating it from the damage caused by the act of some other party, has never been allowed to stand in the way of a recovery of some damage.

In Jenkins v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 67 N. J. L. 331, 57 L.R.A. 309, 51 Atl. 704, it is held that "in an action of tort, if it be impossible . . . to distinguish between the damage arising from the actionable injury and damage which has another origin, the jury should be left to make, from the evidence, the best estimate in their power, . . . and award to the plaintiff compensatory damages for the actionable injury."

In Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 117, it is said: Damages will not be denied because 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

their nature is such that they cannot be accurately measured. If they cannot be measured by a fixed rule, all facts and circumstances tending to show what they are should be submitted to the jury.

In Occidental Consol. Min. Co. v. Comstock Tunnel Co. (C. C.) 125 Fed. 244, the court said: "While the plaintiff could not recover remote or speculative damages, based solely on conjecture, it is not deprived from recovering such general damages as are shown by the testimony to have been necessarily occasioned as the result of the breach, although the amount may not be made so absolutely clear and certain as to be easy of computation."

In Weitzman v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 33 App. Div. 585, 53 N. Y. Supp. 905, a child struck by an electric car was thrown upon the fender and carried a distance of 32 to 150 feet, where he rolled off, and was killed by being crushed under the wheels. It was held that, irrespective of whether the child was guilty of contributory negligence in the first instance, yet when he was thrown into and upon the fender, of which the employees of the company had knowledge, the company became liable for any further injury which could have been prevented by the exercise of "reasonable care," the question as to the existence of which should have been submitted to the jury.

In Gould v. McKenna, 86 Pa. 297, 27 Am. Rep. 705, the defendant's roof sloped towards and ran into the outside wall of plaintiff's building. Defendant's roof was covered with tin, and where the roof joined with plaintiff's wall, this tin covering was turned up and carried along plaintiff's wall for a height of about a foot, thus forming a sort of apron for the protection of the wall for that distance above the roof. A hard rain came, and the water, rising above the apron, percolated through and down along the inside of the wall, damaging plaintiff's goods. Some of the water also came from the rain beating against the unprotected portion of the wall above the apron. The court held that the damages should be apportioned, saying: "But for the water falling through the wall above, and not brought down by the defendant's roof, the plaintiff alone was answerable, for the defendant had no part in causing it to flow there. Each cause of the injury was independent of the other. Hence the instruction was proper to allow no damages for the water running into the store through the wall above, provided the apron or flushing was sufficient. True, it is difficult to apportion the damages arising from the insufficiency of the apron; but this cannot exempt the defendant from a positive injury done by casting the flowage of his roof into his neighbor's store. The rainfall through the wall above a sufficient apron or barrier did not contribute to produce this injury, though it did add to the damage sustained by the plaintiff's goods. Hence it was the duty of the jury to apportion the loss according to the actual injury of the defendant by separating it, as well as they could, upon the evidence, from the loss arising from the openness of the wall above a sufficient apron. . . . The difficulty of separating the damage from each independent cause may be great, but it does not change the nature of the tortious act of the defendant, or relieve him from liability." The doctrine here announced as to the separation or apportionment of damages finds support in Little Schuylkill Nav. R. & Coal Co. v. Richards, 57 Pa. 142, 98 Am. Dec. 209; Seely v. Alden, 61 Pa. 302, 100 Am. Dec. 642; Bradford v. Downs, 126 Pa. 622, 17 Atl. 884; Jackson v. Natchez & W. R. Co. 114 La. 982, 70 L.R.A. 294, 108 Am. St. Rep. 366, 38 So. 701; Raasch v. Elite Laundry Co. 98 Minn. 357, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 940, 108 N. W. 477; Russell v. Tomlinson, 2 Conn. 206; Adams v. Hall, 2 Vt. 9, 19 Am. Dec. 690; Partenheimer v. Van Order, 20 Barb. 479, and many other cases.

It should be borne in mind that if the plaintiff in this case sustained injury by reason of the one fact that he got his fingers caught between the rollers of the machine, he would have no case, as he assumed that risk as one of the ordinary risks of his employment; but the action is for injuries to the plaintiff's arm, which necessitated its amputation, and which injuries the petition charges "were directly caused by the negligence of defendant in permitting said emergency brake to become defective and out of repair." The evidence we think clearly shows that the injuries complained of were the direct result of the failure of the emergency brake to stop the machinery, and not the direct result of plaintiff's getting his fingers caught in the machinery, although the said injuries would not have occurred if his fingers had not been so caught.

In O'Brien v. McGlinchy, 68 Me. 557, it is said in an opinion by Peters, Ch. J.: "But . . . where the negligent acts of the parties are distinct and independent of each other, the act of the plaintiff precluding that of the defendant, it is considered that the plaintiff's conduct does not contribute to produce the injury, if, notwithstanding his negligence, the injury could have been avoided by the use of ordinary care at the time by the defendant." So, also, in the case of Pickett v. Lisbon Falls Fibre Co. 91 Me. 268, 39 Atl. 996, it is held that, to defeat a recovery, the contributory negligence of the injured party must have contributed as a proximate cause of the injury. "If it operated as a remote cause, or afforded only an opportunity or occasion for the injury, or a mere condition of it, it is no bar to the plaintiff's action." But we need not go beyond our own state for decisions supporting the doctrine above announced. See Lore v. American Mfg. Co. 160 Mo. 608, 61 S. W. 678; Bassett v. St. Joseph, 53 Mo. 300, 14 Am. Rep. 446; Musick v. Jacob Dold Packing Co. 58 Mo. App. 322; Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 482, 2 S. W. 481; Hull v. Kansas City, 54 Mo. 598, 14 Am. Rep. 487; Harrison v. Kansas City Electric Light Co. 195 Mo. 606, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 93 S. W. 951.

In Lore v. American Mfg. Co. supra: Judge Gantt, speaking for the court, said: "It must be apparent from what has already been said that the slipping was not the sole cause of the injury. The injury would not and could not have happened but for another cause, to wit, the insufficient and insecure guard around the gearing; and [if] plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care at the time she accidentally slipped, and but for the unsafe guard would not have been hurt, then, under the decisions of this court, she is entitled to recover." In Harrison v. Kansas City Electric Light Co. supra, wherein is reviewed a number of the cases above cited, Judge Marshall, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "Many other cases in this state might be cited illustrative of the rule in reference to concurrent negligence constituting proximate cause, but the foregoing cases are sufficient to demonstrate that if a defendant is negligent, and his negligence combines with that of another, or with any other independent intervening cause, he is liable, although his negligence . . . without such other independent intervening cause would not have produced the injury."

The case of De Grazia v. Piccardo (1900) 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 107, is on all fours with the case at bar, and we will therefore quote liberally therefrom. In that case the plaintiff was employed to work about a machine called a "macaroni roller," which machine was ordinarily safe to work about. While engaged at his work, either by his own negligence, or in some way unexplained, his left hand was caught between the rollers and crushed, and his arm, being further drawn in the machine, was also injured. There was evidence tending to show that defendant had provided a rope to be used to stop the engine by which the machine was run, and the negligence of the defendant consisted in furnishing an old and defective rope, which broke when an attempt was made to stop the machinery by pulling said rope. In discussing the facts and the legal questions involved, the court said:

"It may be, as the defendant's counsel argue, that the defendant was not bound to provide a rope by which the machine at which the plaintiff worked could be quickly stopped. If the plaintiff had accepted service knowing that there was no such provision for his safety, it might well be argued that the injury he received was within the scope of the danger which both parties contemplated as incidental to the employment. But having provided it, there was an implied obligation on the defendant not to aggravate the plaintiff's risk by an omission to keep it in the condition in which, under all the circumstances, the plaintiff had a right to expect that it would be kept. Perhaps if the defendant removed the rope, and the plaintiff had continued in his employment with knowledge of the increased risk, it could be urged that he accepted it; but it cannot be asserted that he accepted the risk of its becoming rotten and unfit for the purpose for which it was obviously intended. The principle has been thus stated: 'If a person undertakes to do an act or discharge a duty by which the conduct of another may properly be regulated and governed, he is bound to perform it in such a manner that those who are rightfully led to a course of conduct or action on the faith that the act or duty will be properly performed shall not suffer loss or injury by reason of his negligence.' It is not too much to say that, presumably, the plaintiff entered and remained in the defendant's employment in the faith that this appliance would be kept in reasonably safe condition. The learned trial judge correctly stated the duty of the defendant and the principle underlying it in the following instruction: 'But the question is, Did this defendant, having adopted this means of stopping the engine, it seeming to be the fact that there was no engineer at the engine continuously,—did he, having adopted that means, and thereby certifying that that was a proper means (and we will assume for the purposes of this case that it was), exercise due care in seeing that that appliance was kept in order?' There was ample evidence to warrant the submission of this question to the jury, and to sustain their finding that, if the rope had been in proper condition, the machine could and would have been stopped before the injuries for which they awarded damages were caused.

"This brings us to the question as to the liability of the defendant for the increased or additional injuries sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the negligently defective condition of the appliance provided for stopping the machine, assuming that the plaintiff's hand was caught in the rolls without negligence on his part or that of the defendant. Without entering into a discussion of the perplexing doctrine of proximate cause, and its application to this case, we affirm the proposition of the plaintiff's counsel that, under the facts necessarily implied in the verdict, the proximate cause of these additional or increased injuries for which a recovery was permitted was the negligence of the defendant in maintaining an insufficient and unsafe appliance for the stopping of the machine in the event of the occurrence of such an accident, which, under the circumstances, it was the defendant's duty to know might occur. Although this negligence was not the primary cause of the accident, it was the efficient cause of the injuries. Though the plaintiff might have lost the use of his hand by the accident, there was evidence to warrant a finding that he would not have lost the use of his arm if the defendant had exercised due care. It was an accident likely to occur in the use of such a machine, and, although it be conceded that it was not preventable, it does not follow that the employer is not responsible for the consequences which were preventable by the exercise of ordinary care on his part." On the question of the division and computation of damages, the court said: "The difficulty in determining at what precise point the negligence of the defendant became the efficient cause, and of drawing the line between the injuries attributable to accident and those attributable to the defendant's negligence, was not so great in the present case as to be an insurmountable objection to the plaintiff's recovery. There was evidence from which the jury could determine this dividing line with reasonable certainty. The difficulty was not greater than in apportioning damages among those severally liable for the proportion of injury caused by the turning of mine water, culm, sawdust, or the like, in a flowing stream,"—citing Gould v. McKenna, 86 Pa. 297, 27 Am. Rep. 705, and other Pennsylvania cases.

But defendant's counsel insist that even though the court erred in giving the instructions referred to, the verdict was nevertheless for the right party, as the plaintiff failed to make out a prima facie case of negligence against the defendant, and the verdict should therefore be allowed to stand. The burden, of course, was on the plaintiff to establish, directly or by just inference, some want of care on the part of the defendant to which plaintiff's injury might fairly and reasonably be traced, "Negligence, like any ultimate fact in issue, may be established as well by reasonable inferences from other facts as by more direct means of proof." Blanton v. Dold, 109 Mo. 64, 18 S. W. 1149; Barnowsky v. Helson, 89 Mich. 523, 15 L.R.A. 33, 50 N. W. 989. In the Blanton Case, supra, the court said: "It is sometimes a close question to determine what inferences from facts may reasonably be drawn; but it is enough for our present purpose to say that we are of opinion that where such a machine as this starts into motion, entirely out of the usual manner of its operation, as shown in the case at bar, its action affords prima facie evidence of some want of care in its original construction or then condition, calling for explanation from the party responsible therefor." In that case is cited with approval the case of Mooney v. Connecticut River Lumber Co. 154 Mass. 407, 28 N. E. 352, wherein it was held that the starting, without apparent cause, of the carriage of a sawing machine, when left at rest, with "the lever locked which was used to start and stop it," whereby the plaintiff was injured, constituted evidence to support a finding that there was negligence in the construction or condition of the machine with reference to its reasonable safety.

We think, upon the principle announced in the above cases, the failure of the emergency brake to operate so as to stop the machinery was prima facie evidence of want of care in its construction or then condition, and that it was for the defendant to rebut such evidence of want of care on its part. But other facts in evidence indicate that defendant was not as careful as it should be in testing this safety appliance, and so discovering its condition before plaintiff was injured by reason of its being out of repair. The employees working at and about the machines were not permitted to test the appliance, and were warned, under penalty of being discharged, not to pull down on the brake bar "unless someone is caught in the machinery, or in case of severe accident." Defendant's foreman, testifying for plaintiff, stated that he generally tested the appliance himself, and that the company had no stated or regular time to test it. "There was several times when we tested it that it did not work, but we fixed it up, and the last time I tested it it worked all right." He further testified that "before Scheurer was hurt, we had tried the automatic brake about every two or three weeks."

Taking into consideration the object for which this safety appliance was installed, and the increased danger to which defendant's employees were exposed in the event 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

such appliance was out of repair and inoperative, we think that inspections at intervals of two or three weeks were not as frequent as reasonably necessary. It is the duty of the master to see that proper inspections are made of the machinery, tools, and appliances with or about which his servants are at work. "The master must use such reasonable tests to discover defects as ordinary prudence suggests. The amount of care required is measured by the circumstances of each case, depending upon the kinds of machinery used, the risks incident to its use, and the hazard of the business in which it is used. Whether the defendant could have discovered the defect in the hand hold in this case by the exercise of ordinary care was a question for the jury, and not for the court, to determine." Gutridge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. 520, 16 S. W. 943. In § 3786 of Mr. Thompson's work on the Law of Negligence, the duty of the master in this respect is thus stated: "The master is not only bound to make a reasonably careful inspection of the premises, machinery, tools, and appliances which he provides for the use of his servants, when they come into his hands, but he is also bound to repeat such inspections from time to time, as often as may be reasonably necessary, having regard to the exigencies and risks of his business, to the end that they shall not be used by his servants after they get out of repair in such a sense as to be dangerous."

In this case, the way of testing the appliance was simply to start the engine and then pull down the brake lever to see if the safety appliance would do its work, and this, we infer from the evidence, could consume but little time. That being true, and considering the danger to which the plaintiff was exposed in the event the appliance was out of order, perhaps it would not be too much to expect such test and inspection to be made every morning. It was for the jury to determine that question: we think there was ample evidence to warrant the submission of the question of defendant's negligence to the jury.

The plaintiff was earning $1.75 a day at the time he was injured, since which time, according to the evidence, he had not been able to obtain permanent employment. He ran errands for people, and in that way was able to earn a few dollars a week. He held "one job as night watchman, at $1 a night, for the Baden Laundry, but was laid off." There can be no question that the loss of an arm is a grievous affliction, and particularly so to a workman who has to depend upon the work of his hands for subsistence. There are but few occupations open to him when thus maimed, and his earning capacity is necessarily greatly impaired.

Under the evidence before us, and the principles of law applicable thereto, we are of opinion that the plaintiff has a prima facie good case.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for new trial.

All concur.

Petition for rehearing denied March 31, 1910.

Note.—May servant assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence.

Introduction.

In many cases, the broad statement is made without apparent qualification that a servant never assumes the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence; and in other cases, statements are made to the effect that a servant does not assume such risks unless the danger is so great that a reasonably prudent man would not continue to work under the dangerous conditions; or, in other words, unless the servant is guilty of contributory negligence. But if the servant is guilty of contributory negligence, there would seem to be no room, or at least no necessity, for the application of the doctrine of assumption of risk, and the practical effect of such a rule would be to abolish assumption of risk, so far as the master's negligence is concerned.

On the other hand, innumerable cases in the same jurisdictions have held that the servant in the case at bar was precluded from recovering because the risk, although created by the master's negligence, had been assumed by him. Many cases have held that the servant may assume a risk even when it is created by the breach of a duty expressly imposed upon the master by statute.¹ So, too, many cases, in applying or in refusing to apply, the so-called "promise to repair" rule, proceed upon the theory that the servant may assume risks even though created by the master's negligence.²

And it is to be noted that while many decisions in Missouri hold that negligence on the part of the master eliminates any question of assumption of risk, the court in SCHEURER v. BANNER RUBBER Co. suggests that if the servant knew that the appliance was out of order, and still continued to work at it, it might well be argued that he accepted the increased risk.

It would be impracticable, if not impossible, to gather all of the cases which discuss the doctrine, or rather doctrines, of assumption of risk, and no attempt has been made to exhaust the cases on any of the points discussed below. The purpose of the note is rather to show the fundamental principles underlying the general doctrine of assumption of risk, and to point out, in a comprehensive way, the causes of much of the apparent conflict in the decisions.

The application of the general doctrine of assumption of risk is frequently modified by extrinsic matters, as where the master had promised to repair a defect, or where the servant was a minor or inexperienced, or was acting directly under the orders of the master, or where there is a statute imposing upon the master the duty of remedying the defect or removing the danger. It is not proposed to discuss the effect that any of these matters may have upon the application of the general doctrine, and cases involving them have been included only when the discussion of the general doctrine is considered of especial value.

It may be stated at the beginning that it is an impossible task to reconcile all of the statements concerning assumption of risk found in the reported cases. The question of assumption of risk enters into a great majority of the very large number of cases dealing with the law of master and servant which are being handed down at the present time; and it could not be expected that all of the decisions, or, rather, the language used in them, would be entirely harmonious. But much of the conflict is more apparent than real, and disappears when the general principles governing the question are borne in mind, together with the particular state of facts that is being dealt with by the court. While there are two distinct and directly contrary views taken of the subject, all jurisdictions, with but two exceptions, are very harmonious in holding to one general rule, and statements made in many jurisdictions, apparently at conflict with this rule, are intended to apply merely to the state of facts presented by the case at bar, and, so limited, are not really in conflict with the general rule asserted by the other decisions in that jurisdiction.

¹ See notes to Davis v. Forbes, 47 L.R.A. 190; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981; Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 646; and Hill v. Saugestad, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 634.

² See note to Illinois Steel Co. v. Mann, 40 L.R.A. 782. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Necessity of negligence on part of master to permit recovery.

In every case involving the liability of the master for an injury to a servant, it is elemental that there can be no recovery unless the master has been negligent,—has been guilty of some breach of duty owing by him to the servant;³ at least, there can be no recovery in the absence of some special contract or statute expressly providing therefor.⁴ Consequently, if the servant fails to show that the master has been negligent, he cannot recover; not primarily because he has assumed the risk of the injury, or in any way waived his rights, or failed to exercise due care, but because the master has incurred no liability. If the servant fails to show some breach of duty on the part of the master, he fails to establish even a prima facie case. In most, if not in all, employments, some dangers remain after the master has fulfilled his full duty in furnishing the place, appliances, and tools, and in all other ways; and it is a very convenient mode of expression to say, as the courts almost universally do, that the servant assumes the risk of all such dangers, but it seems illogical, at least, to say that the ser-vant's inability to recover for injuries due to such dangers rests upon his assumption of the risks thereof, since the master's non-liability would appear to rest peculiarly upon the absence of any breach of duty upon his part. In view of this, it is unfortunate that some courts have considered it necessary in some cases to discuss at length both the question of assumption of risk and of contributory negligence or lack of due care on the part of the servant, when they have expressly found that the master was not negligent.⁵

It should be said, possibly, that the court may frequently add the discussion as to assumption of risk after holding that the master was not negligent, merely to show that if it should be mistaken as to the master's negligence, the servant even then could not recover, for he had waived any right thereto that he might have possessed. But that this is the reason for introducing the question of assumption of risk is not always made clear.

That some employments are much more dangerous than others needs scarcely to be stated; but however dangerous the employment may be, if the master has not been negligent in doing his duty to the servant, there can be no recovery.⁶

³ Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Love, 10 Ind. 554; Perigo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 276, 3 N. W. 43; Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 520, 9 N. W. 364; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. State, 75 Md. 152, 32 Am. St. Rep. 372, 23 Atl. 310; Davis v. Forbes, 171 Mass. 548, 47 L.R.A. 170, 51 N. E. 20; Bradburn v. Wabash R. Co. 134 Mich. 575, 96 N. W. 929; Huda v. American Glucose Co. 154 N. Y. 474, 40 L.R.A. 411, 48 N. E. 897; Tucker v. Northern Terminal Co. 41 Or. 82, 68 Pac. 426; Welch v. Carlucci Stone Co. 215 Pa. 34, 64 Atl. 392, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 299; Powell v. Ashland Iron & Steel Co. 98 Wis. 35, 73 N. W. 573.

And in W. B. Conkey Co. v. Larsen (Ind.) 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 91 N. E. 163, the court said: "Before a cause of action can be said to be stated, it must appear affirmatively that the plaintiff's injury was the direct result of some fault or negligence of the defendant in respect to the particular cause of the injury."

The evidence must establish some personal fault or neglect of duty on the master's part, or what is equivalent thereto, in order to justify a verdict. Crown v. Orr, 140 N. Y. 450, 35 N. E. 648.

When a servant demands from his master compensation for an injury received in his service, it is necessary that he trace some distinct fault to the master. Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 34, 3 N. W. 240.

And in Tobler v. Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co. (Ala.) 52 So. 86, the court said: "The final question to be determined in every case of an action by the servant against the master, as such, is this: Was the master guilty of a breach of duty to the servant who brings the action?"

⁴ By an amendment to the labor law of New York (chap. 1674, Laws 1910), it is provided that if an employee engaged in certain extraordinarily hazardous employments, such as the operation of locomotives, the erection or demolition of steel bridges or buildings, the handling of explosives, etc., is injured without serious or wilful misconduct upon his part, then the master must make certain compensation to him, whether such injury was caused by a necessary risk or danger of the employment, or one inherent in the nature thereof, or was caused by the negligence of the master. This law was upheld at special term in Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 124 N. Y. Supp. 290, and this decision was affirmed by the appellate division (opinion not yet reported.)

⁵ This confusion is well shown in Bradburn v. Wabash R. Co. supra, where the court said: "If the employer is not negligent in exposing the employee to those dangers, he is not liable for any injury resulting, for two reasons: (a) He himself is free from negligence; and (b) the employee has assumed the risk." It would appear that these reasons are not distinct, the second being merely another way of stating the first. In such a case, the servant may be said to assume the risk for the very reason that the master has not been negligent.

⁶ Thus, in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wild, 109 Ill. App. 38, the court said that the Very often it is impossible to tell from the opinion and facts given, whether the court finds that the master did in fact fail in his duty to the servant or not; and in many cases it is unnecessary to determine this, for the danger causing the injury was known and appreciated by the servant, and consequently the risk thereof is held to have been assumed by him, whether it was created by the master's negligence, or was merely an ordinary risk incident to the service. In either case, the servant's knowledge of the danger is held to preclude a recovery, and, as has been stated, the master's negligence is immaterial, and it is unnecessary for the court to decide whether he was negligent or not.⁷ So it has been said that the old-fashioned formula as to the distinction between ordinary and extraordinary risks has by no means entirely disappeared, but is largely fading from vision, because, in so many cases, no one can tell where the one begins and the other ends. This is true, also, with respect to the distinction between usual and unusual risks.⁸

But in many cases this becomes an important question as a matter of pleading. The rule is universal that the servant must allege and prove that his injury was not due to one of the ordinary risks of the service, or, in other words, that the master had been negligent. On the other hand, the weight of authority is to the effect that assumption of risk, as used with reference to risks created by the master's negligence, is an affirmative defense, and consequently must be pleaded and proven by the defendant. Of course, this question of pleading is entirely without the scope of this note, but reference is made to it to show the necessity of keeping clearly in mind the ordinary risks of a particular business are those which are a part of the natural and ordinary method of conducting the business, even though they might fairly be called extraordinary with reference to a different business, or a different department of the same business.

So, in Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. 131 Iowa, 724, 106 N. W. 359, it was said that a servant may properly be held to have assumed the risk of extraordinary dangers which are naturally incident to extraordinary service.

And in Louft v. C. & J. Pyle Co. (Del.) 75 Atl. 619, the court said: "Many employments are by their nature dangerous. Some are very dangerous; but such employments, because of their dangers, are not therefore unlawful, nor is the rule of the assumption of risks on the part of the employee changed or modified according to the varying degrees of the danger of the employment, as the servant is presumed to have contracted with reference to all the hazards and risks of such employment."

Although the natural and inherent dangers in the calling of a brakeman are very great, he assumes the risk of injury therefrom as a part of his contract of employment. Pratt v. Missouri P. R. Co. 139 Mo. App. 502, 122 S. W. 1125.

As a general rule, a servant assumes all risks ordinarily and usually incident to the service in which he engages, whether they be few or many, small or great. Roberts v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. 84 S. C. 283, 66 S. E. 298.

⁷ Thus, in Waxahachie Oil Co. v. McLain, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 334, 66 S. W. 226, the court said: "If the servant knows the danger, it is immaterial whether it was caused by the master's negligence or otherwise."

And the employee assumes the risk of all dangers obviously incident to his employment, whether the employer is negligent or free from negligence in exposing him to such dangers. Bradburn v. Wabash R. Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

supra. And to the same effect was the decision in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 227 Ill. 478, 118 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. E. 529.

A servant assumes all the risks and hazards of the service that are open and apparent to him, whether they are necessarily incident to the service or not. United States Cement Co. v. Koch, 42 Ind. App. 251, 85 N. E. 490.

A servant assumes all the risks, however created, of which he knows, or which he should have acquainted himself with. Harrison v. Detroit, Y. A. A. & J. R. Co. 137 Mich. 78, 100 N. W. 451.

It makes no difference whether the place or appliances are as safe as can be, reasonably safe or not reasonably safe, provided the servant knows the lack of safety and the risk he runs on account of it. Kenney v. Meddaugh, 55 C. C. A. 115, 118 Fed. 209.

The principle of assumed risk is independent of the negligence of the employer or the contributory negligence of the employee. Brouseau v. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co. 158 Mich. 312, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1052, 122 N. W. 620.

"The waiver of the negligence of the defendant," says Mr. Justice Beck in Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 520, 9 N. W. 364, "places the case in the same position as though the defendant had not been negligent; and without the negligence of the defendant there can be no recovery." This statement is quoted with approval in Tucker v. Northern P. Terminal Co. 41 Or. 82, 65 Pac. 426.

The introduction at this point of cases holding that the servant may assume the risk of the master's negligence may be somewhat illogical, but they are presented for the purpose of showing one very fruitful cause of much of the apparent conflict in the cases.

⁸ Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 107 Minn. 260, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 138, 120 N. W. 360.

fact that, although the courts do not always expressly find that the master was negligent or was not negligent, nevertheless it is fundamental that there can be no recovery unless the master has in fact been negligent, and that the expression "assumption of risk," as applied to the ordinary risks of the service, is not a defense, but is merely a convenient mode of expression, and is only an equivalent of the statement that the master is not an insurer, and is not liable after he has exercised ordinary care for the protection of his servant.

Distinction between ordinary and extraordinary risks.

Thus, it will readily be seen that the dangers which a servant may incur in any employment fall naturally into two classes: First, those risks which are not created by the master's negligence, or the ordinary risks of the service; and second, those risks which are created by his negligence, or extraordinary risks. Although the distinction between these two classes of risks is frequently not noted by the courts, it is clearly recognized and discussed in many cases.⁹

It should be noted at this point that while the most logical classification of the risks to which the servant is exposed divides them into the two classes noted above, viz., non-negligent and negligent risks, some authorities have divided such risks into the "known" and the "unknown"

risks, and the servant, according to these authorities, assumes the known risks, but does not assume the unknown risks. While the result arrived at in these cases is not materially different from that reached by dividing the risks into the negligent and the non-negligent, yet such a classification would seem to be illogical, since it combines in one class both risks for which the master is not in any way responsible and risks for which he is prima facie liable. And again, while it may be true, generally speaking, that a servant may be held, as many courts say, to have assumed all known risks, and does not assume unknown risks, yet no court goes to the extent of holding that a servant may recover for injuries due to unknown risks if the master, also, has neither actual nor constructive knowledge of them, for then he is guilty of no breach of duty to the servant. Furthermore, such a classification meets with difficulty in matters of pleading, and also of proof for, by the overwhelming weight of authority, the burden is upon the servant to show that his injury did not result from an ordinary risk of the service, but by the weight of authority the burden is upon the master to show that the risk, if an extraordinary one, was assumed by the servant. Attention has been called to the classification according to whether the risk was known or unknown for the sole purpose of explaining some cases which cannot be readily explained according to the classification adopted in this note.¹⁰

⁹ Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 837, 92 S. W. 244, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 430; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Mangan, 86 Ark. 507, 112 S. W. 168; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Gillison, 173 Ill. 264, 64 Am. St. Rep. 117, 50 N. E. 657; Armour v. Golkowska, 202 Ill. 144, 68 N. E. 1037; Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Smith, 225 Ill. 74, 80 N. E. 65; Kolfski v. Railroad Supply Co. 235 Ill. 146, 85 N. E. 274; Sankey v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 118 Iowa, 39, 91 N. W. 820; Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. supra; Clark v. Johnson County Teleph. Co. 137 Iowa, 81, 114 N. W. 554; Rhoades v. Varney, 91 Me. 222, 39 Atl. 552; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 94 Me. 17, 46 Atl. 804; Maryland, D. & V. R. Co. v. Brown, 109 Md. 304, 71 Atl. 1005; Murphy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 18, 72 N. E. 330; Knisley v. Pratt, 148 N. Y. 372, 32 L.R.A. 367, 42 N. E. 986; Whipple v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 19 R. I. 587, 61 Am. St. Rep. 796, 35 Atl. 305; Crandall v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 19 R. I. 594, 35 Atl. 307; McGar v. National & P. Worsted Mills, 22 R. I. 347, 47 Atl. 1092; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly, 98 Tex. 123, 80 S. W. 79; Atchinson, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Mills, 49 Tex. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Civ. App. 349, 108 S. W. 480, second appeal 116 S. W. 852; Dumas v. Stone, 65 Vt. 442, 25 Atl. 1097; Severance v. New England Tale Co. 72 Vt. 181, 47 Atl. 833; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ward, 90 Va. 687, 24 L.R.A. 717, 44 Am. St. Rep. 945, 19 S. E. 849; Nadau v. White River Lumber Co. 76 Wis. 120, 20 Am. St. Rep. 29, 43 N. W. 1135; Powell v. Ashland Iron & Steel Co. 98 Wis. 35, 73 N. W. 573.

So, in Knisley v. Pratt, supra, the court said that the rule as to the risks of service, or ordinary risks, is entirely distinct from the rule of obvious risks.

¹⁰ In Hightower v. Gray, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 674, 83 S. W. 254, the court said: "A servant assumes the ordinary risks incident to the particular service in which he has voluntarily engaged. The risks here referred to are those ordinarily connected with the particular work in which the servant is engaged, and with which it will be assumed that he is acquainted. But there are other risks, which may not be incident to the business, which are obvious, that is, such as are manifest to observation, whether they arise from the nature of the business, the manner in which it is conducted, or the use of improper or defective appli-

The "ordinary" risks of the service are best defined as those risks which remain after the master has used all reasonable care to remove them, and do not include any risk or hazard due to the master's negligence.¹¹

Assumption of ordinary risks.

It is a universal rule that a servant, by his very act of entering the service, by his very contract of employment, assumes these ordinary risks of the service, and if he is injured solely because of them, he cannot recover.¹²

It is true that a servant may recover ances. The same factors figure in both classes of cases, because both rest upon the basis that it is negligence to expose a servant to a danger of which he is ignorant, and it is not negligence to expose him to a danger of which he has knowledge. The liability of the master turns in both instances upon the knowledge of the danger by the servant, the knowledge being presumed in the one case and necessary to be proved in the other. If the servant actually knows or is charged with knowledge of the risks attending his master's work, he assumes such risks, and cannot recover for injuries arising from such risks. All that the servant can demand from the master is that he shall not be exposed to dangers unknown to him."

¹¹ Bunker Hill & S. Min. & Concentrating Co. v. Jones, 65 C. C. A. 363, 130 Fed. 813, writ of certiorari denied in 195 U. S. 629, 49 L. ed. 352, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787; American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Urbanski, 89 C. C. A. 91, 162 Fed. 91; National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. Fagan, 115 Ill. App. 590; Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Hardsaw (Ind. App.) 79 N. E. 1062, affirmed on rehearing in (Ind.) 77 N. E. 363; Fitter v. Iowa Teleph. Co. (Iowa) 121 N. W. 48; Emporia v. Kowalski, 60 Kan. 64, 71 Pac. 232; Warren v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 122 S. W. 862; Roff v. Summit Lumber Co. 119 La. 571, 44 So. 302; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly and Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Mills, supra; Promer v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 90 Wis. 215, 48 Am. St. Rep. 905, 63 N. W. 90.

The master's negligence in supplying the physical means and agencies for the conduct of the business is not a hazard usually or necessarily attendant upon the business. Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612.

Ordinary risks are such as remain after the master has used all reasonable means to eliminate them. Seley v. Southern P. Co. 6 Utah, 319, 23 Pac. 751, reversed on other grounds in 152 U. S. 145, 38 L. ed. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530.

A risk which the master has created by doing or permitting something to be done which ought not to have been done, or by even if injured by some latent danger, unknown to him, which cannot be removed by the master by the exercise of ordinary care, if that danger is known to the latter, and he fails to inform the servant of it; but, in such a case, the recovery is not based upon the mere existence of the danger, but upon the master's negligence in failing to warn the servant, so that, in fact, such a risk is to be classed with those extraordinary risks created by the master's negligence.

The reason why ordinary risks of the service are held to be assumed by the servant by his contract is that he must necessarily have had such risks in mind when omitting some precaution which, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have been taken, cannot be regarded as one of the ordinary risks of any employment. George v. Clark, 29 C. C. A. 374, 56 U. S. App. 505, 85 Fed. 608.

The risks which are not obvious or apparent to ordinary observation, that the employee assumes, are such perils only as exist after the master has used due care to guard the former against danger. Miller v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 65, 169 Fed. 567.

Known dangers which can be obviated by the exercise of reasonable care are not such as are incident to the business. Schermerhorn v. Glens Falls Portland Cement Co. 94 App. Div. 600, 88 N. Y. Supp. 407.

Defects are not ordinary risks of the service. American Smelting & Ref. Co. v. McGee, 84 C. C. A. 573, 157 Fed. 69.

Risks which ought not to have existed, and which would not have existed but for the master's negligence, are not included in the risks assumed as ordinarily incident to the employment. Dumas v. Stone and Severance v. New England Talc Co. supra.

By the expression, "risk ordinarily incident to the work," is meant a risk of injury that does not grow out of an act of negligence on the part of the master. Freeman v. Fuller (Tex. Civ. App.) 127 S. W. 1194.

¹² A servant is conclusively presumed to have assumed the ordinary risks of the employment. This is a part of his contract of service. Schroder v. Montana Iron Works, 38 Mont. 474, 100 Pac. 619.

And in Ross v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 243 Ill. 440, 90 N. E. 701, the court said: "The usual and ordinary dangers incident to the service are assumed by the contract of hiring. One entering into an employment which is necessarily more or less dangerous is held to take those dangers into consideration in making his contract to work, and for an injury received from such dangers, the servant cannot recover."

And in Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. 131 Iowa, 724, 106 N. W. 359, the court said: "When a servant enters the employment of a master, he is presumed to have taken into consideration

he made his contract, and that his compensation was fixed in reference thereto.¹³

But the assumption of risks by virtue merely of the contract of employment does not, according to the generally accepted rule, extend beyond the "ordinary" risks of the employment; in other words, the servant does not, merely by entering the employment, assume the extraordinary risks created by the master's negligence.¹⁴

A few cases, particularly in Massachusetts, do hold that if, on entering the employment, the servant knows that the master is in some way negligent in the conduct of his business, or in respect to the place, appliances, and tools, the servant will be considered as making his contract with reference to such negligence.¹⁵ This view, however, is against the great weight of authority.

Assumption of extraordinary risks.

It thus appearing that, according to the general rule, the servant does not, by his contract of employment, assume the risk such danger and exposure to injury as is naturally incident to or connected with such service, even when the master has exercised all reasonable care for his servant's safety."

¹³ Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184; Hayden v. Smithville Mfg. Co. 29 Conn. 548; Cumberland & P. R. Co. v. State, 44 Md. 283; Sherman v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 17 N. Y. 156; Stager v. Troy Laundry Co. 38 Or. 480, 53 L.R.A. 459, 63 Pac. 645; Noyes v. Smith, 28 Vt. 59, 65 Am. Dec. 222; Cooper v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 24 W. Va. 37.

¹⁴ A. L. Clark Lumber Co. v. Northcutt (Ark.) 129 S. W. 88; Rex v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 2 Marv. (Del.) 337, 43 Atl. 246; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Gillison, 173 Ill. 264, 64 Am. St. Rep. 117, 50 N. E. 657; Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Smith, 225 Ill. 74, 30 N. E. 65; Sankey v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 118 Iowa, 39, 91 N. W. 820; Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. 131 Iowa, 724, 106 N. W. 359; Rhoades v. Varney, 91 Me. 222, 39 Atl. 552; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 94 Me. 17, 46 Atl. 804; Maryland, D. & V. R. Co. v. Brown, 109 Md. 304, 71 Atl. 1005; Murphy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 18, 72 N. E. 330; Grimm v. Omaha Electric Light & P. Co. 79 Neb. 387, 112 N. W. 620, 114 N. W. 769; Anderson v. Milliken Bros. 123 App. Div. 614, 108 N. Y. Supp. 61; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Meehan (Tex. Civ. App.) 129 S. W. 190; Promer v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. supra.

The very expression, risks naturally incident to or inherent in the employment," exclude ex vi termini the idea of negligence. Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. supra.

So, in Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co. 235 Ill. 140, 85 N. E. 274, the court said: "The master's negligence is not an ordinary and usual risk of the employment, hence, the servant does not assume dangers arising therefrom by his contract of hiring, but the servant, knowing of such negligence, may assume the risk, and in such case he assumes it because he knows of it, and not because it is an ordinary one."

There is no implied contract arising out of a contract of service that the servant shall take the risk of the master's negligence. Anthony v. Leeret, 105 N. Y. 591, 12 N. E. 561.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The master's negligence is not a hazard which the servant, in legal contemplation, is presumed to assume by his contract of employment. Hawley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 66 C. C. A. 216, 133 Fed. 150.

¹⁵ Thus, in Bagley v. Wonderland Co. 205 Mass. 238, 91 N. E. 317, the court said that the doctrine of contractual assumption of risk did not apply, for the reason that the defective conditions had come into existence since the servant's contract of employment.

So, in Silvia v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 203 Mass. 519, 89 N. E. 1061, the court said that if there was negligence of the defendant or its superintendent, there was no contractual assumption of risk by the plaintiff, for he could not have contemplated when he entered the service that there would be such negligence.

By the terms of the employment, the servant accepted the permanent appliances as he found them. Griffin v. Joseph Ross Corp. 204 Mass. 477, 90 N. E. 926.

So, in Arnold v. Harrington Cutlery Co. 189 Mass. 549, 76 N. E. 194, where a servant employed in a cutlery factory was injured by being struck by a splinter flying from the steel upon which he was at work, due to the fact that the master was using an unfit quality of steel, the court said: "There is no ground for the contention that he assumed the risk of such an accident. There was no contractual assumption of the risk, for the contract of employment had no reference to the use of this kind of steel; and there was no subsequent assumption of the risk, for it cannot be said as a matter of law that he knew and appreciated the risk."

And in Mahoney v. Dore, 155 Mass. 519, 30 N. E. 366, the court adopted the view that, by his contract of employment, the servant assumes not only the ordinary risks of the service, but also the risks of defects in the places and appliances which existed at that time.

The servant, by entering the service of the master, assumes all known or apparent risks which are incident to it, however dangerous the service may be, even if it might be conducted more safely by the employer. Mundle v. Hill Mfg. Co. 86 Me. 400, 30 At. 16; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. supra.

"Obvious imperfections in methods or machinery, existing at the time of the employment, cannot be made the basis of a

of dangers created by the master's negligence, the question then arises, When, if ever, does the servant assume such risks?¹⁶

Any breach of the master's primary duties to the servant, such as a failure to use due care in furnishing a reasonably safe place and appliances or tools, renders the master prima facie liable to his servant for any injuries proximately caused thereby. Such is the unquestioned rule, universally recognized at the present time. The converse of this proposition, viz., that a servant does not prima facie assume the risks of dangers created by the master's negligence to perform his primary obligations to the servant, has also been stated so frequently as to become axiomatic.¹⁷ liability in favor of an employee who suffers an injury in the course of his employment, for the reason that the employer has a right to have and use imperfect methods and tools, and to ask others to enter his employ to aid him in such use, and that in so doing he does not undertake to insure the employee." Ragon v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 97 Mich. 265, 37 Am. St. Rep. 366, 54 N. W. 612. It will be noted that this view is similar to that taken in the Massachusetts decisions.

But such liability of the master is only prima facie, and may be rebutted, and is rebutted, according to practically every decision in which the question is expressly before the court and adjudicated by it (with the exception of decisions in Missouri and North Carolina), by proof that the servant, with actual or constructive knowledge of the defects, and an appreciation of the dangers, entered or continued in the employment without complaint of the defects, and without any promise on the part of the master to remedy them. By so entering or remaining in the service with such knowledge of the defects, the servant is held to have assumed the risk of such defects, even though they are the result of the master's violation of his duty.

Dean Huffcutt, in his work on Agency, adopted the view that, so far as defects and dangers which existed at the commencement of the service were concerned, the servant's assumption of risk was based upon the contract; but that his assumption of any dangers thereafter created by the negligence of the master was based upon the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria. In many respects this appears to be a logical view, but, as is shown by the court in Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 107 Minn. 260, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 138, 120 N. W. 360, although it has some judicial sanction, it has not been enforced with any considerable degree of unanimity or consistency, and does not avail to solve the difficulty of the servant's assumption of risk where the master has violated some statutory duty.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

—the two senses in which the term is used.

Such an assumption of risk is clearly distinct from that assumption of the risk of the ordinary dangers which was discussed in the early part of the note. Assumption of risk, as applied to the ordinary risks of the service, is merely a rhetorical phrase used to connote the idea that the master is not an insurer against injuries resulting from dangers which cannot be removed by the exercise of due care upon his part. In the second sense, assumption of risk has a vastly different significance; it implies negligence on the part of the master and a prima facie liability, but it also implies a waiver of the effects of that negligence if it injures the servant. It is an affirmative defense to rebut that prima facie liability due to proof of the master's negligence.

Assumption of risk in the first sense is not a distinct proposition of law, but merely a mode of expression which adds nothing distinctive. In the second sense it is one of the fundamental principles of the law of master and servant, and is relied upon by the master to relieve himself from the prima facie liability arising from his negligence more than is any other defense which is open to him.¹⁸

As a natural result of this use of the phrase "assumption of risk" in two senses so entirely distinct, much confusion has arisen.¹⁹ It is to be regretted that, on ¹⁶ In Hawley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. supra, the court, after making the general assertion that the master's negligence is not a hazard which the servant, in legal contemplation, is presumed to risk, said that it was very clear that the decedent did not, on entering the service, assume the risk of injury from the hazard which had been created by the master's negligence, but added significantly: "When, if ever, did he assume it?"

¹⁷ 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 620.

¹⁸ Thus, in Duffey v. Consolidated Block Coal Co. (Iowa) — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 124 N. W. 609, the court said: "In the first form herein indicated, a specific pleading of assumption of risk of the ordinary dangers incident to an employment is a mere amplification of the general denial, and adds nothing to it in a legal sense. In the second form herein indicated, it is an affirmative defense, and must be specifically pleaded as such."

¹⁹ In speaking of the necessity of pleading assumption of risk, the court in Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. 131 Iowa, 724, 106 N. W. 359, said: "The very common use of this phrase with reference to two widely different legal propositions is doubtless responsible for the confusion here existing. When a servant enters the employment of a master, he is presumed to have taken into the one hand, the phrase lends itself so readily, in a rhetorical way, to express the condition in which the servant is placed where the master has not been negligent, and that, on the other hand, it has a peculiar, distinctive, technical meaning, embodying a special affirmative defense which relieves the master from the consequences of his negligence. And it is perhaps even more to be regretted that the term is so often used with no explanation as to which meaning is intended. The term has so often been used in the first sense, merely connoting the idea that the master is not prima facie liable, that it is perhaps too much to hope that it may come to be used solely to designate the affirmative defense; but it is to be hoped that more courts will follow the example of the Iowa court, consideration such danger and exposure to injury as is naturally incident to or connected with such service, even when the master has exercised all reasonable care for his servant's safety. . . . This so-called 'assumption of risk' inheres in the contract of employment or in the relation of master and servant, and need never be pleaded as a defense. A simple denial of the charge of negligence raises the question of this assumption sufficiently for all purposes of the case."

²⁰ See quotation from Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. supra, note 19, and from Duffey v. Consolidated Block Coal Co. infra, note 21.

²¹ Thus, in Duffey v. Consolidated Block Coal Co. (Iowa) — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 124 N. W. 609, the court said: "The term 'assumption of risk' has come to be used in a twofold sense. It is often said that an employee assumes the ordinary risk that is incident to his employment. This form of assumption of risk is often pleaded by defendants in personal injury cases, although it is quite unnecessary to do so. Assumption of risk in its true sense has reference to those risks arising out of the negligence of the master, when such negligence is known to the employee, and the danger therefrom appreciated by him."

One of the most comprehensive statements as to assumption of risk, embracing the application of the doctrine in both meanings of the term, is made in Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co. 115 Mo. App. 297, 91 S. W. 460, where the court said: "The servant, upon entering the service of the master, impliedly assumes, by his contract of hire, for the same compensation, the hazards which result from such risks as are ordinarily incident to the employment in which he engages, and in addition to these risks, ordinarily incident, etc., he also, either by entering or continuing in the service, and using, without complaint, defective machinery or appliances, or, without complaint, continuing to labor in an unsafe or dangerous place, assumes the risk of such defective machinery or appliances or unsafe or dangerous and designate the sense in which the term is used, in some distinctive manner."²⁰

In many cases, as was shown in note 9, the distinction between ordinary and extraordinary risks is noted, but unfortunately, the courts seldom go further, and point out the very vital distinction between the phrase "assumption of risk" as applied to ordinary, and as applied to extraordinary, risks. But the distinction between the two uses of the term has been carefully drawn and very clearly stated in some cases.²¹ —knowledge as an element of assumption of extraordinary risks.

Assumption of risk in the sense of an affirmative defense relied upon by the master to relieve himself from liability for place, provided he knew not only that the machinery or appliances were defective or the place unsafe, but also knew and understood and appreciated the dangers which were liable to result therefrom."

And in Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Burchard, 35 Colo. 539, 86 Pac. 749, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 994, the court made this same distinction, saying that they were there considering the question of assumption of risk in case the defendant was negligent, and not the case of the risk of danger of an appliance, which every employee assumes.

So, in Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 837, 92 S. W. 244, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 430, the court said that in the application of the doctrine of assumption of risk a distinction must be made between those cases where the injury is due to one of the ordinary risks of the service, and when it is due to some altered condition of the service caused by the negligence of the master. If the servant negligently fails to inform himself of the ordinary risks of the service, he will still be held to have assumed them; but he is not presumed to know the risks and dangers caused by the negligence of the master which change the conditions of the service. Nevertheless, if he realizes the danger, and elects to go ahead and expose himself to it, although he acts with the greatest care, he may, if injured, be held to have assumed the risk.

And in Ross v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 243 Ill. 440, 90 N. E. 701, the court said: "The usual and ordinary dangers incident to the service are assumed by the contract of hiring. One entering into an employment which is necessarily more or less dangerous is held to take those dangers into consideration in making his contract to work, and for an injury received from such dangers the servant cannot recover. There is, moreover, another class of dangers which the servant assumes, not because they were in contemplation at the time of hiring, but because the servant, having obtained knowledge of the existence of such danger after he is employed, elects to continue without his negligence is dependent wholly upon the knowledge, actual or constructive, of the servant of the existence of the danger.²² complaint, or promise of his employer to remove the danger after the servant obtains such knowledge. This branch of the rule seems to rest upon a species of waiver, and is expressed by the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria."

²² As to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servant, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, post, 1260.

The doctrine of assumption of risk rests on intelligent acquiescence with knowledge of danger and appreciation of the risks. Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. supra.

One of the first principles of assumption of risk is knowledge of the danger. Malley v. Kelly-Atkinson Constr. Co. 144 Ill. App. 226, affirmed in 240 Ill. 102, 88 N. E. 234.

So, in Silvia v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 203 Mass. 519, 89 N. E. 1061, the court says that there is no contractual assumption of risk of the negligence of the master or his superintendent, but that an assumption of risk of such negligence is wholly dependent upon the servant's knowledge of the danger.

The doctrine of assumed risk applies, and is limited in its application, to dangers which the servant knows or ought to know. McDonald v. Champion Iron & Steel Co. 140 Mich. 401, 103 N. W. 829; Bradburn v. Wabash R. Co. 134 Mich. 575, 96 N. W. 929; De Kallands v. Washtenaw Home Teleph. Co. 153 Mich. 25, 116 N. W. 564, 15 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 593.

The doctrine of assumption of risk is wholly dependent upon the servant's knowledge, actual or constructive, of the dangers. Millen v. Pacific Bridge Co. 51 Or. 538, 95 Pac. 196.

²³ Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Benton, 65 C. C. A. 660, 132 Fed. 460; McGlynn v. Brodie, 31 Cal. 376; Gisson v. Schwabacher, 99 Cal. 419, 34 Pac. 104; Higgins v. Williams, 114 Cal. 176, 45 Pac. 1041; Ft. Wayne v. Christie, 156 Ind. 172, 59 N. E. 385; Standard Oil Co. v. Fordeck, 34 Ind. App. 181, 71 N. W. 163; Smart v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 47 La. Ann. 869, 17 So. 346; Wagner v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 188 Mass. 437, 74 N. E. 919; Moynon v. D. S. McDonald Co. 188 Mass. 499, 74 N. E. 929; Kerrigan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 86 Minn. 407, 90 N. W. 976; Young v. Boston & M. R. Co. 69 N. H. 356, 41 Atl. 268; Kotera v. American Smelting & Ref. Co. 80 Neb. 648, 114 N. W. 945; Leazotte v. Boston & M. R. Co. 70 N. H. 5, 45 Atl. 1084; Edwards v. Tilton Mills, 70 N. H. 574, 50 Atl. 102; Hickey v. Taaffe, 105 N. Y. 26, 12 N. E. 286; Eastland v. Clarke, 165 N. Y. 420, 70 L.R.A. 751, 59 N. E. 202; Welle v. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

And without knowledge of the extraordinary danger there can be no assumption of risk.²³

Celluloid Co. 175 N. Y. 401, 67 N. E. 609; Murtaugh v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 40 Hun, 456, 3 N. Y. Supp. 483; Walker v. Newton Falls Paper Co. 111 App. Div. 19, 97 N. Y. Supp. 521; Elms v. Southern Power Co. 79 N. C. 502, 60 S. E. 1110; Meehan v. Great Northern R. Co. 13 N. D. 432, 101 N. W. 183; Wagner v. Portland, 40 Or. 389, 60 Pac. 985, 67 Pac. 300; Doyle v. Pittsburgh Waste Co. 204 Pa. 618, 54 Atl. 363; Bartholomew v. Kemmerer, 211 Pa. 277, 60 Atl. 908; Esher v. Mineral R. & Min. Co. 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 387; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Milam, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 688, 50 S. W. 417; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Waller, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 44, 65 S. W. 210; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Darby, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 413, 67 S. W. 446; Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co. 41 Tex. Civ. App. 287, 91 S. W. 383; Carbine v. Bennington & R. R. Co. 61 Vt. 348, 17 Atl. 491; Drown v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 80 Vt. 1, 68 Atl. 801; Bolton v. Ovitt, 80 Vt. 362, 67 Atl. 881; McDuffee v. Boston & M. R. Co. 81 Vt. 52, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1019, 69 Atl. 124; Truckers' Mfg. & Supply Co. v. White, 108 Va. 147, 60 S. E. 630; McDannald v. Washington & C. River R. Co. 31 Wash. 585, 72 Pac. 481; Young v. O'Brien, 36 Wash. 570, 79 Pac. 211; Peterson v. Sherry Lumber Co. 90 Wis. 83, 62 N. W. 948; Relyea v. Tomahawk Pulp & Paper Co. 110 Wis. 307, 85 N. W. 960; Nix v. C. Reiss Coal Co. 114 Wis. 493, 90 N. W. 437; Hocking v. Windsor Spring Co. 125 Wis. 575, 104 N. W. 705.

The doctrine that a servant who has no knowledge, actual or constructive, of an extraordinary risk, is not chargeable with its assumption, is applied in every jurisdiction where the principle of the common law is recognized. 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. 638.

And in Mumford v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 128 Iowa, 685, 104 N. W. 1135, the court said: "The entire doctrine of waiver or assumption of risk is based upon knowledge, actual or implied, and consent, or the equivalent thereof; that is to say, if the injured party, in the exercise of ordinary care, should have known of the defect, he in law is held to a knowledge thereof. If with knowledge, actual or implied, he continues in his master's employ without protest and promise of repair, he is held to have acquiesced in, consented to, and assumed the risk. But without this knowledge, actual or implied, there can be no waiver."

An essential prerequisite to the right of recovery is the fact that the defect in the machinery was unknown to the servant. King v. Morgan, 48 C. C. A. 507, 109 Fed. 446.

The servant must have knowledge of the master's negligence in order to assume it. Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 197 Ill. 440, 64 N. E. 382.

In order to assume the risk created by the master's negligence, the servant must have positive knowledge or reasonable means of

But it makes no difference whether the defect existed at the commencement of the employment, or arose thereafter.²⁴

A few judicial statements embodying the rule as to assumption of risk in the second sense will be cited, but it is to be noted that almost innumerable cases stating the rule or applying it may be found in every jurisdiction with the exception of Missouri and North Carolina, and it may be added that even in these jurisdictions there may be found some early decisions asserting and applying the general rule.²⁵

In a number of cases, it is said that, as positive knowledge of it. Dorsey v. Phillips & C. Constr. Co. 42 Wis. 583.

Assumption of risk implies knowledge of danger. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Walker, 41 Ind. App. 588, 84 N. E. 730.

The servant must have actual or constructive knowledge. Stevens v. United Gas & Electric Co. 73 N. H. 159, 70 L.R.A. 119, 60 Atl. 848.

Whether or not a risk is assumed depends upon whether or not it is known. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 52 S. W. 89.

²⁴ The servant assumes not only the ordinary risks incidental to the employment, but as well all risks arising and becoming known to him during his service. Andresik v. New Jersey Tube Co. 73 N. J. L. 664, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 913, 63 Atl. 719, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1006; Johnson v. Devoe Snuff Co. 62 N. J. L. 417, 41 Atl. 936; Dillenberger v. Weingartner, 64 N. J. L. 292, 45 Atl. 638.

A servant, by continuing in the employment without complaint, assumes the risks of the defects and dangers which arise during the service, to the same extent that he assumes those which existed when he entered the employment. St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 63 L.R.A. 551, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495.

²⁵ Among the risks and dangers which the servant assumes by entering or continuing in the employment without notifying his master of them are those which arise from the failure of the master completely to discharge his duty to exercise ordinary care to furnish the servant with a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe appliances to use. Ibid.

And in Ross v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 243 Ill. 440, 90 N. E. 701, the court said: "There is, moreover, another class of dangers which the servant assumes, not because they were in contemplation at the time of hiring, but because the servant, having obtained knowledge of the existence of such danger after he is employed, elects to continue without complaint, or promise of his employer to remove the danger after the servant obtains such knowledge."

Where the negligent breach of duty on the part of the employer augments the hazards of the service, the employee may hold the employer accountable for an injury caused by such negligent breach of duty, unless, by voluntarily continuing in the employer's service, he has assumed such danger. Rogers v. Leyden, 127 Ind. 50, 26 N. E. 210.

A servant has a right to assume in the first instance that the place is safe, and it is for the defendant to show either knowledge, or that the conditions were such that ignorance was inexcusable. Calloway v. Agar Packing Co. 129 Iowa, 1, 104 N. W. 721.

So in Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. 36 Kan. 129, 12 Pac. 582, the court said that if the servant has full knowledge of the danger, and continues in the master's employment without complaint, receiving from the master full pay for his services, he assumes the risk himself of the known danger, and waives any negligence that might otherwise be imputable to the master.

If a servant has knowledge of the circumstances under which the employer carries on his business, and chooses to accept the employment, or continue in it, he assumes such risks incident to the discharge of his duties as are open or obvious. In such cases it is not a question whether the place prepared for him to occupy, and which he assents to accept, might, with reasonable care, have been made more safe. His assent dispenses with the performance on the part of the master of the duty to make it so. Wood v. Heiges, 83 Md. 257, 34 Atl. 872.

A servant is conclusively presumed to have assumed the ordinary risks of the employment. This is a part of his contract of service. Beyond this he does not assume any risk, except by express agreement, or where the circumstances are such that he must be presumed to have done so from the fact that he continued in the employment, though the extraordinary danger was known to him, or was so obvious that he must be presumed to have had knowledge of it. Schroder v. Montana Iron Works, 38 Mont. 474, 100 Pac. 619.

And in Westlake v. Murphy, 85 Neb. 45. 122 N. W. 684, it was held that a servant, by accepting employment, assumed all the risks of injury caused by the negligence of competent fellow servants, by the dangers arising from the existing conditions, including machinery, appliances, etc., which were known to him, or apparent and obvious to persons of his understanding and experience.

In Olney v. Boston & M. R. Co. 71 N. H. 427, 52 Atl. 1097, the court said: "While there are rarely any stipulations expressed in the contract of hiring, by remaining in the service the servant assumes the risk of injury from defects in the machinery furnished him, of which he knows or which reasonable care would disclose to him. Continuance in service with knowledge of the risk is generally conclusive evidence of the servant's agreement to assume it."

If a servant chooses to enter into an employment involving danger of personal injury which the master might have avoided, he takes upon himself the risk of all the a general rule, a servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence, but that this rule is subject to an exception where the servant continues in the service with knowledge of the negligence and an appreciation of the danger.²⁶ This, of course, is but a variation of the general rule. There is possibly no valid objection to the statement of the rule in that form, but it should be borne in mind that it is probably contrary to the historical development of the doctrine of assumption of risk. There is authority for the statement that originally the servant was held to have assumed all the risks which were manifestly incident to the employment, no matter how created, and that any modification of this general doctrine has come with the development of the law.²⁷ —apparently contrary statements as affected by the facts of the case.

As was stated in the introduction, many cases have stated broadly, and without any apparent qualification, that a servant hazards incident to the employment, the existence of which are known to him, or which are plain and obvious, and which he has no reason to expect will be counteracted or removed. Chandler v. Atlantic Coast Electric R. Co. 61 N. J. L. 380, 39 Atl. 674.

In Crown v. Orr, 140 N. Y. 450, 35 N. E. 648, the court laid down the general rule that if a servant voluntarily enters into or continues in the service without objection or complaint, having knowledge or the means of knowledge of the dangers involved, he is deemed to have assumed the risk.

The risks assumed by an employee are such perils as exist after the employer has used due care and precaution to guard the former against danger by providing him a reasonably safe place to work in, reasonably safe appliances to work with, reasonably safe materials to work upon, and reasonably competent fellow servants to work with; but, when the employee undertakes to use defective or unsafe appliances with knowledge of such unsafe condition, he assumes the increased risk of danger, and the employer is relieved from responsibility to the employee by reason of the employee's knowledge. Neeley v. Southwestern Cotton Seed Oil Co. 13 Okla. 356, 64 L.R.A. 145, 75 Pac. 537.

If, with knowledge of the defect, the servant continues in the employment, he assumes the risk. Geldard v. Marshall, 43 Or. 438, 73 Pac. 330.

It is well established that the employer must furnish the employee with a safe place to work; but it is just as well established that the employee assumes the risks of apparent peril, even though it is due to the master's negligence. Johnson v. Tacoma Mill Co. 22 Wash. 88, 60 Pac. 53.

So, if a servant is aware of negligence on the part of the master in the conduct of his business, he assumes the risk of such negligence in either entering or continuing in such business. Sanderson v. Panther Lumber Co. 50 W. Va. 42, 55 L.R.A. 908, 88 Am. St. Rep. 841, 40 S. E. 368.

And so, in Promer v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 90 Wis. 215, 48 Am. St. Rep. 905, 63 N. W. 90, the court said: "The risk consequent upon the failure of the company to properly discharge its duty to the plaintiff, as its employee, is not one of the ordinary risks incident to his employment, and the plaintiff did not assume the consequences of it by accepting and entering upon his work. But if the negligence of the company, or element of danger, though not incident to his employment, was open and obvious, or such that the servant, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have observed it and comprehended the danger likely to result, then he assumed the risk if he continued in the employment."

However negligent the master may be, if the servant knows of it, he assumes the risk. Yess v. Chicago Brass Co. 124 Wis. 406, 102 N. W. 932.

²⁶ Lindsay v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 50 C. C. A. 298, 112 Fed. 384; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit, 87 C. C. A. 401, 160 Fed. 440; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Donovan, 87 C. C. A. 600, 160 Fed. 826; Federal Lead Co. v. Swyers, 88 C. C. A. 547, 161 Fed. 687; Miller v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 65, 169 Fed. 567; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 663, 42 L. ed. 1188, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Flowers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 55 Fla. 603, 46 So. 718; South Florida R. Co. v. Weese, 32 Fla. 212, 13 So. 436; National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. Fagan, 115 Ill. App. 590; Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. 131 Iowa, 724, 106 N. W. 359; Merrill v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 29 Utah, 264, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695, 61 Pac. 85.

The rule that the servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence was said in Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, to be subject to the exception that where a defect is known to the employee, or is so patent as to be readily observed by him, he cannot continue to work in the face of such knowledge, and without objection, without assuming the hazard incident to such a situation.

In Field v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 86 App. Div. 148, 83 N. Y. Supp. 535, the court held that the principle that before an employee can be held to have assumed the risks connected with his service, the employer must have fully performed the duties enjoined upon him, does not obtain where the employee is cognizant of the danger, and continues his service in the face of that full knowledge.

²⁷ 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. 620; Potts v. Plunkett, 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 290.

And as recent as Indianapolis & C. R. Co.

never assumes the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence; but it must not be taken from this that the court itself intended that such statements were to be taken literally as an expression of a general rule to be universally applied. The same courts have, without hesitation or question, decided in many other cases that the servant complaining of injuries received because of the master's negligence was precluded from recovering because he had assumed the risk of such negligence. The language of the court must be taken in connection with the particular facts with which the court was dealing. Considering only the conditions under which the servants in these cases were working, and the particular acts of negligence of which the masters were guilty, it might well be that the servants would never assume the risk; but it is unfortunate that the courts do not so qualify their language as to show that the statements had reference to the facts of the cases at bar only. Such statements, general in form, but in fact limited in application, cannot but be misleading.²⁸

In many cases which contain broad and unqualified statements of the character referred to, there was no occasion for the court to qualify its statement in any way, for, by an examination of the facts, it will be found that the servant did not know of the danger,²⁹ or that the servant was acting directly under the orders of the master,

v. Lowe, 10 Ind. 554, which was decided in 1858, it was contended that an employee could never recover of his employer for injuries received whilst in such employment, and the court deemed it necessary to cite authorities to the effect that there might be a recovery in such a case.

²⁸ As is said in Laughy v. Bird & W. Lumber Co. 136 Wis. 301, 117 N. W. 796, many expressions in decided cases exist which are frequently referred to as applicable to facts materially different from those in mind at the time they originated; a much broader meaning being ascribed thereto than was intended or can fairly be given them.

And in Bier v. Hosford, 35 Wash. 544, 75 Pac. 867, the court said: "In the opinions of the ablest courts and jurists there may be found language which is proper and accurate, as applied to the facts of the particular controversy under consideration, but is warped from its obvious meaning when applied in a different connection, or to a dissimilar state of facts."

One of the most conspicuous examples of the misleading effect of such general and unqualified statements is found in Lee v. Missouri P. R. Co. 195 Mo. 400, 92 S. W. 614, where the court was called upon to decide a case arising in Kansas. The court, applying the so-called Missouri rule, held that as the master had been negligent, there could be no question of assumption of risk in the case. The court admitted that it must yield to the decisions of the highest court of the sister state as to the law of that state, but said that it appeared that the court in Emporia v. Kowalski, 66 Kan. 64, 71 Pac. 232, laid down the law in regard to assumption of risk, in effect the same as it had often been declared by the Missouri court. And the Missouri court also quotes from O'Neill v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Neb. 358, 60 L.R.A. 443, 86 N. W. 1098, which was cited in the Emporia Case. In both of these cases, it is true that the court states in general terms that the servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence, but in the Kansas case, the court was dealing with a defect which could not have been discovered by the servant by any 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) reasonable investigation, and the court expressly says in another part of the opinion that if a servant knows of negligent conditions, and continues in the service without objection, and without a promise to repair, he is properly held to have assumed the risk. And so, in the Nebraska case, in the very portion of the opinion quoted in the Missouri case, the court shows in express terms that it is speaking of the risks assumed by the contract of employment. The so-called Missouri doctrine has never acquired the slightest foothold in either Kansas or Nebraska.

²⁹ Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Riley, 76 C. C. A. 107, 145 Fed. 137, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 327; Northern P. R. Co. v. Altimus, 179 Fed. 275; Hopkins v. O'Leary, 176 Mass. 258, 57 N. E. 342; Boucher v. Roberson Mills, 182 Mass. 500, 65 N. E. 819; Tarnoski v. Cudahy Packing Co. 85 Neb. 147, 122 N. W. 671; Goodale v. York, 74 N. H. 454, 69 Atl. 525; Jarvis v. Northern New York Marble Co. 55 App. Div. 272, 67 N. Y. Supp. 78; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Wrenn, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 628, 50 S. W. 210; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Vestal, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 554, 86 S. W. 790; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Udalle (Tex. Civ. App.) 91 S. W. 330; Howland v. Standard Mill. & Logging Co. 50 Wash. 34, 96 Pac. 686.

In Bunker Hill & S. Min. & Concentrating Co. v. Jones, 65 C. C. A. 363, 130 Fed. 813, writ of certiorari denied in 195 U. S. 629, 49 L. ed. 352, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787, it did not appear from the evidence that the defendant in error could have discovered that the roof of the stope was in danger of caving, without a particular inspection thereof, or that the timbering was insufficient to secure the loose rock above.

In Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Groome (Miss.) 52 So. 703, it appears from an examination of the facts that the defect was of such a character that the servant could not have known of it by an ordinary investigation.

In Chambers v. Wampanoag Mills, 189 Mass. 529, 75 N. E. 1093, one of the several looms operated by the servant had become defective, and while it was being re-or of one standing in his place,³⁰ or had been assured by the master that there was no danger.³¹ Again, it will be found that the negligence complained of was the failure of the master properly to inspect the place or appliances,³² or to give a warning of some impending danger known to him,³³ of which failure the servant would be in no position to know. So in other cases, it will be found that the court had in mind the risks assumed by the servant by his contract of employment, so that the effect of the servant's knowledge of the master's negligence was not within the contemplation of the court.³⁴ So a servant does not assume the risk resulting immediately, in point of time from the negligent act of the superintendent.³⁵

So, too, other distinguishing facts or circumstances are to be found in other cases which contain a statement of the broad rule, apparently unqualified.³⁶ paired, he kept the other looms going, and had no opportunity of examining the condition of the repairs before starting the loom again.

³⁰ In McCabe & S. Constr. Co. v. Wilson, 17 Okla. 355, 87 Pac. 320, the servant, an engineer, knew that a bridge was defective, but he was acting directly under the directions of a superior officer, and also upon the assurances of the superintendent of the defendant's construction gang, that the bridge which fell and injured him was safe.

In Benzing v. Steinway & Sons, 101 N. Y. 547, 5 N. E. 449, the servant had been sent into another part of the factory, with which he was wholly unfamiliar.

In Jenks v. Thompson, 179 N. Y. 20, 71 N. E. 286, the servant knew nothing at all about the defective scaffold upon which he was sent to work.

³¹ In McCabe & S. Constr. Co. v. Wilson, supra, the servant, a fireman, had been assured by the superintendent of construction that the bridge which fell and injured him was safe.

In Swensen v. Bender, 51 C. C. A. 627, 114 Fed. 1, the injury was caused by the caving in of a tunnel, due to defective timbering, of which the servant had no knowledge, and the servant had been assured by the master that the place was safe.

³² And in Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Warring, 37 Colo. 122, 86 Pac. 305, the court was dealing with the failure of a railroad company properly to inspect its road.

In Tennessee, Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. King, 161 Ala. 345, 50 So. 75, the negligence in question was the failure of the master to inspect the roof of a mine.

³³ In Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Hulsey, 132 Ala. 444, 31 So. 527, it appears that the particular negligence complained of was the failure of the master's superintendent to give warning of the appearance of danger as the work progressed.

In Belleville Stone Co. v. Mooney, 61 N. J. L. 253, 39 L.R.A. 834, 39 Atl. 764, the injury resulted from a failure of the master's foreman to give warning of a blast.

In Simone v. Kirk, 173 N. Y. 7, 63 N. E. 739, the injury to the servant was caused by the master's failure to warn him of dangerous conditions of which the servant was ignorant.

³⁴ Northern P. R. Co. v. Tynan, 56 C. C. A. 192, 119 Fed. 288; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Touhey, 67 Ark. 209, 78 Am. St. Rep. 109, 54 S. W. 577; Marshall v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 78 Ark. 213, 115 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Am. St. Rep. 27, 94 S. W. 56, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 420; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harmon, 85 Ark. 503, 109 S. W. 295; German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock, 55 Fla. 577, 46 So. 740; Flowers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 55 Fla. 603, 46 So. 718; Piette v. Bavarian Brewing Co. 91 Mich. 605, 52 N. W. 152.

³⁵ Consolidated Coal Co. v. Gruber, 188 Ill. 584, 59 N. E. 254; Illinois Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 220 Ill. 324, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1161, 77 N. E. 190, affirming 123 Ill. App. 285; Murphy v. City Coal Co. 172 Mass. 324, 52 N. E. 503.

In Nelson v. Smyth Constr. Co. (Wash.) 109 Pac. 804, the servant was injured by the negligent act of a foreman in turning a stream of water upon a bank of earth, causing it to fall upon the plaintiff.

³⁶ In Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 34, 3 N. W. 240, the master was not negligent.

In Stearns & C. Lumber Co. v. Fowler, 58 Fla. 362, 50 So. 680, it appears that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, and it does not appear that the master was negligent.

In Warren v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 122 S. W. 862, the court was criticizing the instructions given by the trial court, to the effect that the servant assumed the ordinary risks by entering the service, when, as a matter of fact, the injury was caused by the defendant's negligence.

In Puget Sound Electric R. Co. v. Harigan, 100 C. C. A. 104, 176 Fed. 488, the court approved the following instruction: "Assumption of risk means that one who enters a dangerous employment assumes the hazards which attend that employment which ordinary foresight and reasonable prudence cannot anticipate, and yet are likely to occur." But it appears that the only instruction asked for by the defendant imposed the burden upon the plaintiff of so conducting himself as to avoid all possible injury.

So, also, in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Brooks, 135 Ala. 401, 33 So. 181, the court stated that a servant does not assume a risk created by the master's negligence, but this statement was in answer to a plea of the master which merely alleged that the servant assumed the risk of the negligence, without further alleging that the risk was an obvious one.

And in Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 383, 37 S. W. 906, the danger was created by another servant of the —basis of assumption of risk of master's negligence.

There is considerable conflict of opinion as to the basis of the assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence. The so-called "assumption of risk" of ordinary dangers is usually said to be based upon the contract of employment; but it seems hardly logical to say that, by the terms of the contract of employment, the servant agrees to assume any dangers created by the master's negligence, of which he may acquire knowledge. Yet such is the view taken by many courts.⁸⁷ Other cases base this assumption of risk upon the master, who was not a fellow servant of the injured servant.

In Engelking v. Spokane (Wash.) 110 Pac. 25, the court seems to imply that the servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence, but the court was dealing with a risk "not likely to be appreciated by a man of ordinary prudence."

In Southern Coal & Coke Co. v. Swinney, 149 Ala. 405, 42 So. 808, the servant, engaged at work in the defendant's mine, became sick during the working hours, and left his place of employment, and while leaving the mine along the customary way out, was injured by a car jumping the track, due to the master's negligence.

In Southern P. Co. v. Lafferty, 6 C. C. A. 474, 15 U. S. App. 193, 57 Fed. 536, the negligence complained of was the failure of a railroad company to take proper precautions to prevent "live" engines running away.

In Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, the court expressly stated further in the opinion that there was an exception to the broad rule where the servant knew of the defect.

In Emporia v. Kowalski, 66 Kan. 64, 71 Pac. 232, the court goes on to say that the servant may assume the risks of dangers created by the master's negligence where they are known to him, or ought to have been known to him by the exercise of ordinary care.

In Jacobson v. Hobart Iron Co. 103 Minn. 319, 114 N. W. 951, the court said further in the opinion that whether the servant knew of the defect and appreciated the danger, and therefore assumed the risk, was a question for the jury.

And in Armour v. Golkowska, 202 Ill. 144, 66 N. E. 1037, the court said that the duty of the master to provide a reasonably safe place is a positive duty, and the servant does not assume the risk or peril of a breach thereof, but the court went on to say that whether or not the servant knew of the danger and appreciated the risk thereof, so as to assume the hazard as a risk of her employment, was a question for the jury.

In San Francisco & P. S. S. Co. v. Carlsson, 89 C. C. A. 45, 161 Fed. 851, the general assertion is made without any apparent qualification, either expressed or inferable from the facts stated; but it cannot be presumed that the statement was so intended, in view of the many decisions of the United States Supreme Court to the contrary.

In Black v. Virginia Portland Cement Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

104 Va. 450, 51 S. E. 831, the court said that any failure on the part of the master to observe reasonable care for the protection of his servant is actionable negligence, and is not within the influence of the doctrine of assumed risk. Similar statements were made without qualification in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 10 Am. St. Rep. 827, 4 S. E. 211; Buena Vista Extract Co. v. Hickman, 108 Va. 665, 62 S. E. 804, and in Norton Coal Co. v. Murphy, 108 Va. 528, 62 S. E. 268. But, in the latter case, the court said further in the opinion: "Of course, if the employee knows of the danger, or, in the exercise of due care for his own safety, ought to have known of it, and chooses to remain, he assumes the risk and cannot recover."

⁸⁷ St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Davis, 54 Ark. 389, 26 Am. St. Rep. 48, 15 S. W. 895; German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock, supra; Columbia Creasoting Co. v. Beard (Ind. App.) 89 N. E. 321; Dempsey v. Sawyer, 95 Me. 295, 49 Atl. 1035; Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. 154 Mich. 423, 117 N. W. 910.

The principle of assumed risk rests wholly upon contract, whether the risks are created by the negligence of the master, or are ordinarily incident to the employment. Bauer v. American Car & Foundry Co. 132 Mich. 537, 94 N. W. 9; Bradburn v. Wabash R. Co. 134 Mich. 575, 96 N. W. 929; Swick v. Aetna Portland Cement Co. 147 Mich. 454, 111 N. W. 110; Sipes v. Michigan Starch Co. 137 Mich. 258, 100 N. W. 447; Brouseau v. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co. 158 Mich. 312, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1052, 122 N. W. 620; Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. supra.

By continuing in the service with knowledge of the manner in which it is conducted, the servant agrees that the obvious dangers thereof shall constitute a term of the employment. Britton v. Central U. Teleph. Co. 65 C. C. A. 598, 131 Fed. 844.

And in Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319, 62 N. E. 492, the court said: "The law reads into the contract, from the employee's knowledge and silence, his agreement to assume all known and obvious risks. Whether express or implied, assumption of risk is a matter of contract. In either case, the employee whose injury is due to a known or an obvious defect in place or appliances, which he has suffered to continue without objection, cannot hold the employer liable,—not because the employer was not in fact negligent, for he may not have exercised ordinary care; not because the employee was conmaxim, Volenti non fit injuria,³³ while still | other cases seem to confuse the two thetributorily negligent, for at the time and under the circumstances of the accident he may have used due care to avoid injury; but because the employee has agreed for a sufficient consideration to absolve the employer, and to assume for himself the risk of such injury." The same views are asserted in Avery v. Nordyke & M. Co. 34 Ind. App. 541, 70 N. E. 888; Wortman v. Minich, 28 Ind. App. 31, 62 N. E. 85.

So, in Narramore v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 48 L.R.A. 68, 37 C. C. A. 499, 96 Fed. 298, it was held that assumption of risk is a term of the contract of employment, expressed or implied from the circumstances of the employment, by which the servant agrees that dangers of injury obviously incident to the discharge of his duty shall be at his risk. In the course of the opinion the court said: "The acquiescence of the servant in the conduct of the master does not defeat a right of action on the ground that the servant causes or contributes to cause the injury to himself; but the correct statement is that no right of action arises in favor of the servant at all, for, under the terms of the employment, the master violates no legal duty to the servant in failing to protect him from dangers the risk of which he agreed expressly or impliedly to assume."

And in Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. 5 Ga. App. 142, 62 S. E. 720, the court, in distinguishing between contributory negligence and assumption of risk, says: "However, if he knows the actual condition of things when he contracts, or if he subsequently discovers it, he may not choose to refuse to work. The doing of the work may be such a privilege that he is willing to take the chances of getting hurt; so that he, in the one case, by actually contracting with knowledge of the danger, or, in the other case, by refusing to abandon after knowledge, and thereby waiving the master's breach, raises an implied agreement against himself that he will not hold the master to the obligation of furnishing any safer place, ways of work, servants, or appliances than what already he sees to exist; or, as we say in juridic terminology, he assumes the risk of the delinquencies, and thereafter the law reads this implied agreement or assumption on his part into the contract of employment as a part of it."

Reduced to its last analysis, the doctrine of assumed risk must rest for its support upon the express or implied agreement of the employee that, knowing the danger to which he is exposed, he will assume all responsibility for resulting injury. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bancord, 66 Kan. 81, 71 Pac. 253.

Assumption of risk as to dangers created by the master's negligence is based on contract, which is not contrary to public policy. Coulter v. Union Laundry Co. 34 Mont. 590, 87 Pac. 973.

³³ Thus, in Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Nor- 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

gate, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 981, 72 C. C. A. 365, 141 Fed. 247, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 448, the court, in dealing with the question whether a servant might assume the risk of the master's breach of a statutory duty, said, in regard to the general doctrine, that it was error to assume that the law of assumption of risk is created by the contract between the master and the servant. The court said: "It is the law of the land, governing all persons who assume the relation of master and servant. It is over and above the contract, and depends in no manner for its existence upon the agreement of the parties. It is founded upon public policy, the status assumed by master and servant, and upon the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria. The law establishing the reciprocal duties and obligations of master and servant never originated out of contract, in the sense that the master and servant ever expressly agreed to them. But the common law imposed these duties and obligations as a regulation of those who assumed this relation, regardless of the desires of the master or the servant."

And in O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. 158 Mass. 135, 47 L.R.A. 161, 32 N. E. 1119, the court said: "The doctrine of assumption of the risk of his employment by an employee has usually been considered from the point of view of a contract, express or implied; but, as applied to actions of tort for negligence against an employer, it leads up to the broader principle expressed by the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria."

If a servant has voluntarily assumed the risk of the master's negligence, he is precluded from recovery, either on the ground that he has failed to exercise due care, or as being within the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria. O'Toole v. Pruyn, 201 Mass. 120, 87 N. E. 608.

And in Ross v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 243 Ill. 440, 90 N. E. 701, the court said: "This branch of the rule seems to rest upon a species of waiver, and is expressed by the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria."

Where a servant voluntarily continues in service with knowledge of the defects created by the master's negligence, the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria, has the effect to debar him from a recovery for injuries caused thereby. Mundle v. Hill Mfg. Co. 86 Me. 400, 30 Atl. 16; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 94 Me. 17, 46 Atl. 804.

In Osterholm v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 40 Mont. 508, 107 Pa. 499, the court said that the weight of modern authority is to the effect that the doctrine of assumption of risk, while, in most cases, perhaps, incident to the relation of master and servant, does not grow out of any express or implied contract between the parties, but rather is founded in the principle, resting upon a sound basis of public policy, that he who consents to an act will not be heard to claim that he is wronged by it.

ories.³⁹ And again, other cases speak of the action of the servant in remaining in the service with knowledge of the negligence, as an independent act of waiver, although possibly these courts do not intend to announce a theory distinct from that implied in the maxim.⁴⁰

Ordinarily, it is not a matter of much importance whether assumption of risk is made to depend upon an implied contract or upon the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria, or upon an independent act of waiver; for in either case, it is the knowledge of the servant that the master has been negligent that prevents a recovery. But where the negligence complained of is the master's breach of a statutory duty, the distinction becomes of vital importance, for one line of authorities,⁴¹ proceeding upon the theory that assumption of risk is based upon contract, holds that the courts will not recognize nor enforce as against an ³⁹ Thus, in Faulkner v. Mammoth Min. Co. 23 Utah, 437, 66 Pac. 799, the court said: "Assumed risk is a contract, and may be implied as well as expressed. When a servant enters upon or continues in a service with full knowledge that it is dangerous, and is fully aware of the extent of the danger to which he is exposed, there is an implied contract of assumed risk, by which, on the principle of the maxim, 'Volenti non fit injuria,' the servant waives his right to recover for injuries received by him in such service."

And in Fitzgerald v. Connecticut River Paper Co. 155 Mass. 155, 31 Am. St. Rep. 537, 29 N. E. 464, the court said: "It is well settled that a servant assumes the obvious risks of the service into which he enters, even if the business be ever so dangerous, and if it might easily be conducted more safely by the employer. This is implied in his voluntary undertaking, and it comes within a principle which has a much broader general application, and which is expressed in the maxim, 'Volenti non fit injuria.' The reason on which it is founded is that, whatever may be the master's general duty to conduct his business safely in reference to persons who may be affected by it, he owes no legal duty in that respect to one who contracts to work in the business as it is."

⁴⁰ Thus, in Illinois, C. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 227 Ill. 478, 118 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. E. 529, the court said that the assumption of risk as to dangers created by the master's negligence does not rest wholly upon the contract of hiring, express or implied, but rather upon a waiver which is evidenced by the servant's continuing in the employment with a full knowledge of the danger. The court goes on to say: "Where the servant has knowledge of a danger in connection with the place where he is required to labor, or in connection with the appliances with which he is to do his work, and, with such knowledge, he voluntarily elects to continue in the service without complaint, and without any promises of the master to remedy the defect, he must be held to assume the risks from such known defects, and waives all claim, by thus continuing in the employment, to damages resulting to him from such defect. In such case it is wholly immaterial that the defect exists as a result of gross negligence on the part of the master."

So, also, in Perigo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

R. Co. 52 Iowa, 276, 3 N. W. 43, the court said: "The doctrine of these cases is that the negligence of the defendant, in furnishing defective or improperly constructed machinery and implements, is waived by remaining in the employment without protest or promise of amendment. The waiver of the negligence of the defendant places the case in the same position as though the defendant had not been negligent; and without the negligence of the defendant, there can be no recovery."

So, in Knisley v. Pratt, 148 N. Y. 372, 32 L.R.A. 367, 42 N. E. 986, the court said that the rule as to the risks of service, or ordinary risks, is entirely distinct from the rule of obvious risks; the former resting upon contract, while the latter rests upon an independent act of waiver on the part of the servant.

There is no implied contract arising out of a contract of service that the servant shall take the risk of the master's negligence; but it is a complete answer to the question of negligence that the plaintiff had full knowledge of the situation, and continued in the employment. Anthony v. Leet, 105 N. Y. 591, 12 N. E. 561.

So, in Pollich v. Sellers, 42 La. Ann. 623, 7 So. 786, it is stated that a servant, by remaining in the master's employment after discovery of the defect, is deemed to have assumed the risks incident to the service, and to have waived any claim for damages for injuries therefrom.

And in Branstrator v. Keokuk & W. R. Co. 108 Iowa, 377, 79 N. W. 130, the court, in speaking of the effect of a promise to repair defects, said that the promise to repair is only important as rebutting the inference that defects are waived by continuance in employment with knowledge of their existence.

Where the obvious risks of the business result in injury, the inability of the employee to sue is due to the fact that he voluntarily assumed those risks, not necessarily under an implied contract to do so, but by an independent act of waiver, evidenced by his entering the employment with a full knowledge of all the facts. Knisley v. Pratt, supra; Drake v. Auburn City R. Co. 173 N. Y. 466, 66 N. E. 121; Rooney v. Brogan Constr. Co. 113 App. Div. 813, 99 N. Y. Supp. 939.

⁴¹ The leading case of this character is Narramore v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 48 L.R.A. 68, 37 C. C. A. 499, 96 Fed.

employee an agreement, express or implied, on his part, to waive the performance of a statutory duty of the master, imposed for his benefit, and in the interest of the public; while another line,⁴² asserting that the doctrine is based upon the maxim, and not upon contract, holds that the maxim is as applicable in case of an injury due to the master's breach of a statutory duty as to any breach of duty. There is much conflict upon this question, as will be seen by a reference to the annotation upon the subject.⁴³

Apparent modification of the general rule in some states.

In a few states some apparent modifications of the general rule have appeared and been sustained by a number of decisions. It has been thought best to group cases of this character by states, in order to show their proper relation to the other decisions in the same jurisdiction. It may be well at this point, also, to note one or two decisions which hold that a servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence, although the decisions are against the weight of authority.⁴⁴

—Illinois.

In Illinois the general rule prevails, although there are statements in numerous cases which would seem to imply that some other rule or rules prevail in that jurisdiction. In a number of cases the statement is made, apparently without qualification, that a servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence.⁴⁵

And again the broad statement is made, without apparent qualification, that a servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence unless the danger is so great that a reasonably prudent man would refuse to work in the face of it; this is, of course, but another way of stating that where the master is negligent, the servant does not assume the risk of such negligence, and may recover unless his contract amounts to contributory negligence.⁴⁶

Other cases, however, make it clear that 298 (writ of certiorari denied in 175 U. S. 724, 44 L. ed. 337, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1021), the opinion being written by Judge Taft.

⁴² Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981, 72 C. C. A. 365, 141 Fed. 247, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 448, writ of certiorari denied in 202 U. S. 616, 50 L. ed. 1172, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 63 L.R.A. 551, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495.

⁴³ See notes to Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981; Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 646; and Hill v. Saugestad, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 634.

⁴⁴ A limitation of the general doctrine that a servant assumes the risk of known defects, even if due to the master's negligence, is suggested in Southern P. Co. v. Yeargin, 48 C. C. A. 497, 109 Fed. 436 (writ of certiorari denied in 183 U. S. 695, 46 L. ed. 394, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932), where it was stated that it is manifest that employees ought not, in all cases, to be regarded as having voluntarily assumed the risk of injury merely because they remain in the service with knowledge that certain implements or appliances are out of repair, or that there is a defect in equipment; if the risk is very imminent and obvious, the servant cannot be heard to complain; or, if he is the first to discover a defect, and continues to use the implement without advising his employer of its condition, it may be well to presume that he assumed the risk; but if the master places defective tools or insufficient appliances, and requires him to use them, and the servant is not guilty of negligence in so doing, it would seem that the master ought not to be absolved from liability for his neglect of duty merely because the servant was aware of the defect 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) before being hurt, and did not retire from the service.

In the early Wisconsin case of Chamberlain v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 11 Wis. 239, the court laid down the doctrine that the servant assumes only such risks as remain when the business is conducted with ordinary care and prudence; but this decision is entirely against the rule as laid down by the later Wisconsin cases.

⁴⁵ La Salle v. Kostka, 190 Ill. 130, 60 N. E. 72; Ide v. Fratcher, 194 Ill. 552, 62 N. E. 814; Hinchliff v. Robinson, 118 Ill. App. 450.

⁴⁶ Thus, in Chicago Hair & Bristle Co. v. Mueller, 203 Ill. 558, 68 N. E. 51, the court said: "Extraordinary perils arising from the negligence of the master are not assumed unless they are known and voluntarily encountered, or are obvious, and expose the servant to dangers so imminent that an ordinarily prudent man would anticipate injury as so probable that, in view of it, he would not, even upon the order of the master, continue in the performance of his employment under like circumstances." And to the same effect were statements in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. House, 172 Ill. 601, 50 N. E. 151; Gundlach v. Schott, 192 Ill. 509, 85 Am. St. Rep. 348, 61 N. E. 332; Malott v. Hood, 201 Ill. 202, 66 N. E. 247; Harte v. Fraser, 104 Ill. App. 201; Illinois Steel Co. v. Ryska, 200 Ill. 280, 65 N. E. 734.

And the Mueller Case cites with approval Swift & Co. v. O'Neill, 187 Ill. 337, 58 N. E. 416, in which the court, after stating that while it is true that where an employee who becomes informed of defects in the place must be held to have assumed the risk, nevertheless that rule is subject to well-defined qualifications, said: "The question whether a servant is barred of a right of re-these decisions are not to be taken in the broad sense that the language might indicate, but that the language was in fact modified by the particular facts of the cases; and in a number of the more recent cases it is expressly held that a servant assumes the risks of dangers, even if created by the master's negligence, if such dangers are known or ought to be known to him.⁴⁷

—Michigan.

The doctrine seems to have been adopted in some Michigan decisions that there is no distinction between assumption of risk, as applied to the risks created by the master's negligence, and those risks which remain after the master has fulfilled his full duty; and it is held that the servant assumes the risk of all dangers which cover for injuries incurred by working in an unsafe place or using appliances known by him to be defective, on the ground of assumed risk, is, in fact, based upon the rule that one cannot recover for an injury to the incurring of which he has contributed by his own negligence." And the court further said: "If the danger is obvious, knowledge of that fact will, of course, be attributable to the employee; but if, as already said, the risk is no more than that under which a prudent person would, under like circumstances, continue his employment, then certainly he cannot, as a matter of law, be held to assume the risk."

⁴⁷ St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Morris, 110 Ill. App. 107; Jones & A. Co. v. George, 227 Ill. 64, 81 N. E. 4, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 285; Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Smith, 225 Ill. 74, 80 N. E. 65; Illinois Terminal R. Co. v. Thompson, 210 Ill. 226, 71 N. E. 328; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Heerey, 203 Ill. 492, 68 N. E. 74; Armour v. Golkowska, 202 Ill. 144, 66 N. E. 1037; Consolidated Barb Wire Co. v. Maxwell, 116 Ill. App. 296; Eblin v. American Car & Foundry Co. 143 Ill. App. 386, affirmed in 238 Ill. 176, 87 N. E. 385; Omaha Packing Co. v. Murray, 112 Ill. App. 233.

And a servant who knows that there are dangerous defects on the premises where he works, and does not make complaint and ask for repairs or improvements necessary for his safety, assumes the risk involved, whether he acquired the knowledge before he entered the service or afterwards. Cichowicz v. International Packing Co. 206 Ill. 346, 68 N. E. 1083; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 227 Ill. 478, 118 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. E. 529.

So, in McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Zakzewski, 220 Ill. 522, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 848, 77 N. E. 147, the court said: "The true rule in this regard is that the servant assumes not only the ordinary risks incident to his employment, but also all dangers which are obvious and apparent; and, if he voluntarily enters into, or continues in the service, knowing, or having the means of knowing, its dangers, he is deemed to have assumed the risks, and to have waived all claims against the master for damages in case of personal injury resulting from such dangers."

And in Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co. 235 Ill. 146, 85 N. E. 274, the court, after stating that there is no conflict between the cases which hold that a servant may assume the risk of the master's negligence, and that other class of cases which hold that the negligence of the master is not one of the risks which the servant assumes by his contract of hiring, says: "The master's negligence is not an ordinary and usual risk of the employment, hence the servant does not assume dangers arising therefrom by his contract of hiring, but the servant, knowing of such negligence, may assume the risk; and in such case he assumes it because he knows of it, and not because it is an ordinary one."

That the Illinois court did not intend to confuse the two doctrines of assumption of risk and contributory negligence, and to hold that there could be no assumption of risk unless the conduct of the servant amounted to contributory negligence, is clearly shown in Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Heerey, supra. The trial court had charged the jury to the effect that, as the master had been negligent, the servant could not be held to have assumed the risk of such negligence unless his conduct had been such as to render him chargeable with contributory negligence. Such a charge was held erroneous by the supreme court, which said: "Contributory negligence and assumption of risk are entirely different things in law. Although the two questions may both arise under the facts of a case, yet they are wholly separate and distinct. Every person suing for a personal injury must show that he was in the exercise of ordinary care and caution for his own safety, so that the question of contributory negligence may be involved in every case; but an employee may have assumed a risk by virtue of his employment, or by continuing in such employment with knowledge of the defect and danger, and if he is injured thereby, although in the exercise of the highest degree of care and caution, and without any negligence, yet he cannot recover."

And in Cichowicz v. International Packing Co. supra, the court said: "To say that the servant assumes no risks except such as cannot be obviated by the adoption of reasonable measures of precaution by the master is to abolish the doctrine altogether. Under such a rule, the master is liable in every case where he has been negligent, although the servant knows of the danger, and voluntarily encounters it without objection; and if the master has been guilty of no negligence, he has a complete defense, regardless of any question of the assumption of risk by the servant. Counsel do not contend that are "obviously" incident to the business, regardless of the cause of such risks.⁴⁸

But even in Michigan the vital distinction between risks created by the master's negligence and those ordinarily incident to the business has been noted in some of the later cases.⁴⁹

—Utah.

The earlier decisions in Utah proceed apparently upon the theory that a servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence; ⁵⁰ or, at least, he does not when the risk is not so imminent that to continue in the employment would be negligence on the part of the servant.⁵¹

But later cases have followed the general rule recognized in the other jurisdictions, and hold that the rule that the servant does not assume the dangers and perils occasioned through the negligence of his employer is subject to the exception that a servant does assume such dangers and risks when he knows of them, or they are so obvious that knowledge may be presumed, and with such knowledge he accepts or con-

the doctrine of assumed risk has been abolished, but in effect insist that every case is excepted from its operation."

In regard to some of the cases which seem to lay down a different rule, the court says: "In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. House, supra, the cause of danger was unknown to the servant, and resulted from negligence of the master. In Western Stone Co. v. Musical, 196 Ill. 382, 89 Am. St. Rep. 325, 63 N. E. 664, there was evidence of an order by the foreman to work in a dangerous place, and the servant obeyed the command. The question was whether the servant was guilty of negligence, or whether he acted as a reasonably prudent person would, in view of the command and the duty of obedience. In Swift & Co. v. O'Neill, supra, there was a promise to remedy the defect complained of, and in such a case the servant is only barred by his own contributory negligence. If the risk is no greater than that under which a prudent person would continue the employment, he may recover in case of injury. Where the question is one of negligence on the part of the servant, then the rule is that he must not only know of the defect, but know that it renders the employment dangerous."

That the language used in some of the decisions was apparently conflicting was recognized in Chicago City R. Co. v. Enroth, 113 Ill. App. 285, where the court speaks of the "later" expressions of the supreme court, implying that there had been a change in the rule. The court said: "The later expressions of the supreme court are to the effect, in substance, that if the servant knows, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, should have known, of the master's negligence, subjecting the former to risks or dangers in the course of his employment, he assumes such risk, and cannot recover for an injury caused thereby, unless there is some special circumstance shown, as that he acted in obedience to an order of the master, or that there was a promise on the part of the master to remedy the defect complained of, or perhaps in some other cases."

⁴⁸ McGinnis v. Canada Southern Bridge Co. 49 Mich. 466, 13 N. W. 819; Bradburn v. Wabash R. Co. 134 Mich. 575, 96 N. W. 929; Brouseau v. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co. 158 Mich. 312, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1052, 122 N. W. 620.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The doctrine of the assumption of obvious risks applies as well to those which arise or become known to the employee during the employment, as to those in contemplation at the original hiring. De Kallands v. Home Teleph. Co. 153 Mich. 25, 116 N. W. 564, 15 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 593.

⁴⁹ Thus, in McDonald v. Champion Iron & Steel Co. 140 Mich. 401, 103 N. W. 829, the court said that where the servant shows that the injury received was in consequence of the master's negligence, and was not due to the ordinary risks of the service, the burden is upon the master to show that the servant fully comprehended the danger.

And in Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co. 153 Mich. 495, 117 N. W. 187, the court held that if the machinery was not in proper condition, the servant would assume only such risks as the jury should find were known, or ought to have been known, and appreciated by him.

⁵⁰ Pidcock v. Union P. R. Co. 5 Utah, 612, 1 L.R.A. 131, 19 Pac. 191; Seley v. Southern P. Co. 6 Utah, 319, 23 Pac. 757, reversed on other grounds in 152 U. S. 145, 38 L. ed. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Hill v. Southern P. Co. 23 Utah, 94, 63 Pac. 814; Hone v. Mammoth Min. Co. 27 Utah, 168, 75 Pac. 381.

⁵¹ Mangum v. Bullion, B. & C. Min. Co. 15 Utah, 534, 50 Pac. 834; Faulkner v. Mammoth Min. Co. 23 Utah, 437, 66 Pac. 709.

In the latter case the court said: "The doctrine of assumed risk by the employee does not lessen the master's implied duty to supply and maintain a reasonably safe place for the performance by the servant of the work required of him, except when the place furnished and maintained is so obviously unsafe that a reasonably prudent person would not attempt to work in it, and with a full and intelligent understanding of its defects, or after a failure to exercise reasonable care to ascertain its condition, gave full consent, express or implied, to abide by the consequences which might follow from its use."

In Higgins v. Southern P. Co. 26 Utah, 164, 72 Pac. 690, the court said that the servant assumed the risk of the injury, but in this case he had failed to obey the printed instructions given him to examine the tool by which he was injured.

tinues in his employment without complaint or protest.⁵³

—West Virginia.

In West Virginia the courts have frequently laid down the proposition that if a servant wilfully or willingly encounters dangers which are known to him, or are notorious, the master is not responsible for an injury occasioned thereby.⁵³

This rule is somewhat modified in one case, where the following propositions were laid down by the court: While the general rule of law is that an employee, knowing of defects in machinery, appliances, or in his working place, and still continuing in service, assumes risks, and cannot recover from his employer damages for injury arising from such defects, yet the rule is not without exception. Mere continuance in service with such knowledge is not per se negligence in the employee. He need not stop work in every instance of knowledge of a defect, but may run some risk by continuing service, provided the defects be not plainly dangerous, or be not such as ought to induce a prudent, careful man to believe that accident would probably ensue, and that, looking to his safety, he ought not to continue the work.⁵⁴

Under such a statement of the rule, the difference between assumption of risk and contributory negligence is very slight, to say the least; and it is to be noted that, in the general rule stated above, the two defenses are grouped; neither risks willingly encountered (assumption of risk) nor risks wilfully encountered (contributory negligence) afford the servant a cause of action.

—Wisconsin.

The courts of Wisconsin have shown a tendency to minimize the distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence, and to hold that assumption of risk (as applied to dangers created by the master's negligence) is but a phase of contributory negligence.⁵⁵

But it is to be noted that the effect of this confusion of the two doctrines in Wisconsin (so far as the question discussed in this note is concerned) is not to take away the defense of assumption of risk where the master is negligent, but merely to change the terminology of the defense; these cases in effect hold that if the servant knows, or ought to know, that the master has been negligent, and still continues in the employment, his conduct is in all cases negligence which contributes to the injury, and precludes a recovery. The North Carolina doctrine, on the other hand, although confusing the two doctrines, takes away the defense of assumption of risk in those cases in which the conduct of the servant, according to the generally accepted standard, has not been negligent.

The Missouri doctrine.

The so-called Missouri doctrine is in direct conflict with the general rule stated above, and under it the master's negligence precludes any reliance upon the defense of assumption of risk, and the only defense open to the master is that of contributory negligence.

This rule was early adopted,⁵⁶ and although a large number of decisions seem unwilling to apply it to its fullest ex-

⁵³ Merrill v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 29 Utah, 264, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695, 81 Pac. 85; Garity v. Bullion-Beck & C. Min. Co. 27 Utah, 534, 76 Pac. 556; Leach v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 29 Utah, 285, 110 Am. St. Rep. 798, 81 Pac. 90; Tuckett v. American Steam & Hand Laundry, 30 Utah, 273, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 990, 116 Am. St. Rep. 832, 84 Pac. 500.

⁵⁴ Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co. 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep. 304; Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142, 6 S. E. 53; Humphreys v. Newport News & M. Valley Co. 33 W. Va. 135, 10 S. E. 39; Davis v. Nuttallburg Coal & Coke Co. 34 W. Va. 500, 12 S. E. 539; Seldomridge v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 46 W. Va. 569, 33 S. E. 293; Purkey v. Southern Coal & Transp. Co. 57 W. Va. 595, 50 S. E. 755.

⁵⁵ Graham v. Newburg Orrel Coal & Coke Co. 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 584.

⁵⁶ See notes to Limberg v. Glenwood Lumber Co. 49 L.R.A. 33 and Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 138. And see also Nadau v. White River Lumber Co. 76 Wis. 120, 20 Am. St. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rep. 29, 43 N. W. 1135; Powell v. Ashland Iron & Steel Co. 98 Wis. 35, 73 N. W. 573; Koepeke v. Wisconsin Bridge & Iron Co. 116 Wis. 92, 92 N. W. 558; Revolinski v. Adams Coal Co. 118 Wis. 324, 95 N. W. 122; Pautz v. Plankinton Packing Co. 113 Wis. 47, 94 N. W. 654.

And in Powell v. Ashland Iron & Steel Co. supra, the court, in holding that there was no real practical difference between the defense of assumption of risk and that of contributory negligence, said that, of course, assumption of risk of the ordinary dangers of the employment, where the master was not negligent, had nothing to do with contributory negligence, but the assumption of risks created by the master's negligence was merely a phase of contributory negligence.

⁵⁷ In Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works, 62 Mo. 39, it was held that when the instrumentality with which the servant is required to perform his service is so glaringly defective that a man of common prudence or sense would not use it, the master could not be responsible for damages resulting from it. In such a case the servtent, and some have expressly repudiated it, still the overwhelming weight of authority, especially among the later decisions, supports the rule as stated.

The language used in some decisions is of such a character as to leave apparently no doubt of the intention of the court expressly to hold that negligence on the part of the master will deprive him of the defense of assumption of risk, leaving contributory negligence as the only defense open to him.⁵⁷

The decisions are very numerous which support this so-called Missouri doctrine, and which have permitted a recovery for injuries caused by the master's negligence, although the servant knew of such negligence, and could not have recovered under ant would be guilty of recklessly exposing himself to danger, and would have to abide the consequences. But when the servant incurs the risk of machinery which, though dangerous, is not so much so as to threaten immediate injury, or when it is reasonable to suppose that it may be safely used with great care or skill, a different rule prevails. And this statement was quoted with approval in Stoddard v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 514.

And in Devlin v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 87 Mo. 545, the court said that a servant was not bound to quit the service, nor did he assume all risks from want of repair, unless the conditions were such, to his knowledge, that it would be necessarily dangerous to the mind of a prudent man to incur it.

⁵⁷ The decision in Dakan v. G. W. Chase & Son Mercantile Co. 197 Mo. 238, 94 S. W. 944, probably goes as far in asserting and upholding the Missouri rule as any. The court says: "If the peril of the servant in the performance of his duty is increased by the negligence of the master, and if the servant, knowing that the master has been thus negligent, and that that negligence has rendered the performance of his duty more hazardous, continues in the performance of that duty, a question of contributory negligence then arises,—not a question of assumption of risk. Language is sometimes used by text writers and in some judicial opinions which seems to indicate that, under the circumstances just mentioned, there is an assumption of risk by the servant, but such language is not carefully chosen, or, if it is intended literally as expressed, it does not state the rule of law as declared by this court; it is not the law in Missouri."

The so-called Missouri rule is laid down in Blundell v. W. A. Miller Elevator Mfg. Co. 189 Mo. 552, 88 S. W. 103, as follows: "If the master fails in his duty, and if the servant knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care could know, that the appliances furnished are not altogether or reasonably safe, the servant is not obliged to refuse to use the appliances or quit the service if he reasonably believes that, by the exercise of proper care and caution, he can safely use the appliances, notwithstanding they are not so reasonably safe; and if he does so, and exercises ordinary care and caution, and is injured, he does not waive his right to compensation for injuries received in consequence thereof, nor is he guilty of negligence."

And in Yongue v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

133 Mo. App. 141, 112 S. W. 985, the court said that although there was some conflict among the earlier cases, all of the latest decisions dealing with the defense of assumption of risk held that the retention of service after being apprised of a defective appliance was relevant only to the defense of contributory negligence.

And in Garaci v. Hill O'Meara Constr. Co. 124 Mo. App. 709, 102 S. W. 594, the court said: "The entire subject of the master's nonliability on account of abnormal conditions arising by the neglect of his duty is relegated and to be ascertained and determined by the principles of law with respect to contributory negligence."

"The nonliability of the master where the servant knows of the defect is properly placed on the ground of contributory negligence, rather than of assumption of risk." Settle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 127 Mo. 336, 48 Am. St. Rep. 633, 30 S. W. 125.

The knowledge of the servant that the master has neglected his duty (Wendler v. People's House Furnishing Co. 165 Mo. 527, 65 S. W. 737), or even an express contract between the master and the servant (Blanton v. Dold, 109 Mo. 75, 18 S. W. 1149), does not convert the danger arising therefrom into a risk of the employment assumed by the servant.

The doctrine of assumption of risk has no application where the master is negligent. George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 225 Mo. 364, 125 S. W. 196.

When the master is chargeable with negligence, there can be no assumption of risk. Strickland v. F. W. Woolworth & Co. 143 Mo. App. 528, 127 S. W. 628.

The servant assumes all the risks of the service, in the absence of active negligence on the part of the master. Chrismer v. Bell Teleph. Co. 194 Mo. 189, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 492, 92 S. W. 378.

Assumption of risk, being essentially contractual, disappears from view when negligence is found to be the producing cause of the injury. Mack v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 531, 101 S. W. 142.

A plea which alleged that the negligence of the master was known to the servant does not constitute a defense to the action, on the theory of an assumption of risk. Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 270, 73 S. W. 167.

Under the Missouri doctrine it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to allege that he was ignorant of the defect. Cole v. St. Louis Transit Co. 183 Mo. 81, 81 S. W. 1138.

The existence of the master's negligence excludes the implication of an assumption of risk on the part of the servant. Shore

the general rule adopted in other jurisdictions.⁵⁸

Many other cases have applied, or at least recognized, the Missouri doctrine as the law in that state.⁵⁹

In other cases, without expressly stating that the servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence, the courts have said that mere knowledge of such negligence will not preclude a recovery.⁶⁰

In many cases the court has said that the servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence unless the danger is so great and imminent that a reasonably prudent man would not incur it.⁶¹ This, of course, in effect abolishes assumption of risk, although retaining the term to designate one form of contributory negligence. In a few cases the court, in adopting this terminology, states that assumption of risk, as used in this sense, is but another term for contributory negligence.⁶² Such a use

v. American Bridge Co. 111 Mo. App. 278, 86 S. W. 905.

In Bennett v. Crystal Carbonate Lime Co. (Mo. App.) 124 S. W. 608, the court said that, generally speaking, it is the law of Missouri, as declared by the supreme court, that the servant no longer assumes the risk arising from the master's negligence, however obvious the risk may be.

⁵⁸ Hamilton v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 108 Mo. 364, 18 S. W. 977; O'Mellia v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 115 Mo. 205, 21 S. W. 503; Wendler v. People's House Furnishing Co. and Cole v. St. Louis Transit Co. supra; Lee v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. 400, 92 S. W. 614; George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. supra; Robbins v. Big Circle Min. Co. 105 Mo. App. 78, 79 S. W. 480; Houts v. St. Louis Transit Co. 108 Mo. App. 686, 84 S. W. 161; Yongue v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. supra.

⁵⁹ Lee v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra; Phippin v. Missouri P. R. Co. 190 Mo. 321, 93 S. W. 410; Daken v. G. W. Chase & Son Mercantile Co. supra; Brady v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co. 206 Mo. 509, 102 S. W. 978, 105 S. W. 1195; Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co. 209 Mo. 141, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 292, 107 S. W. 481; Tinkle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 212 Mo. 445, 110 S. W. 1086; Zellars v. Missouri Water & Light Co. 92 Mo. App. 107; Nash v. Dowling, 93 Mo. App. 156; Parsons v. Hammond Packing Co. 96 Mo. App. 372, 70 S. W. 519; Cothron v. Cudahy Packing Co. 98 Mo. App. 343, 73 S. W. 279; Zongker v. People's Union Mercantile Co. 110 Mo. App. 382, 86 S. W. 486; Deckerd v. Wabash R. Co. 111 Mo. App. 117, 85 S. W. 982; Shore v. American Bridge Co. 111 Mo. App. 278, 86 S. W. 905; Warren v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 498, 87 S. W. 585; Stafford v. Adams, 113 Mo. App. 717, 88 S. W. 1130; Obermeyer v. F. H. Logeman Chair Mfg. Co. 120 Mo. App. 59, 96 S. W. 673, affirmed in (Mo.) 129 S. W. 209; Longree v. Jackes-Evans Mfg. Co. 120 Mo. App. 478, 97 S. W. 272; Mack v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 531, 101 S. W. 142; Huston v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 578, 107 S. W. 1045; Kirby v. Manufacturers' Coal & Coke Co. 127 Mo. App. 588, 106 S. W. 1069; McGuire v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 128 Mo. App. 677, 107 S. W. 411; Yongue v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. supra; Denker v. Wolff Mill. Co. 135 Mo. App. 340, 115 S. W. 1035; Reickert v. Hammond Packing Co. 136 Mo. App. 565, 118 S. W. 525; 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Pratt v. Missouri P. R. Co. 139 Mo. App. 502, 122 S. W. 1125; O'Brien v. Western Implement Mfg. Co. 141 Mo. App. 331, 125 S. W. 804; Wilson v. United R. Co. 142 Mo. App. 676, 121 S. W. 1083; Trent v. Lechtman Printing Co. 141 Mo. App. 437, 126 S. W. 238; Jewell v. Excelsior Powder Mfg. Co. 143 Mo. App. 200, 127 S. W. 598; King v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 143 Mo. App. 279, 127 S. W. 400; Patrum v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 129 S. W. 1041; Kile v. Union Electric Light & P. Co. (Mo. App.) 130 S. W. 89.

And the so-called Missouri doctrine was expressly asserted and adhered to in McMurray v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 225 Mo. 272, 125 S. W. 751, decided in February, 1910, where the court said that the rule of assumption of risk never applies to a case where the evidence shows that the injury was attributable to the negligence of the employer, for the reason that, where his negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, it can no longer be truthfully said that the injury was attributable to an assumption of risk.

⁶⁰ Huhn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 440, 4 S. W. 937; Hamman v. Central Coal & Coke Co. 156 Mo. 232, 56 S. W. 1091; Sheperd v. St. Louis Transit Co. 189 Mo. 362, 87 S. W. 1007; Clippard v. St. Louis Transit Co. 202 Mo. 432, 101 S. W. 44; Warner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. App. 192; Smith v. Little Pittsburg Coal Co. 75 Mo. App. 177; Booth v. Kansas City & I. Air Line, 76 Mo. App. 516; Harriman v. Kansas City Star Co. 81 Mo. App. 124; Adams v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. 95 Mo. App. 111, 68 S. W. 1053; Depuy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 110 Mo. App. 110, 84 S. W. 103; Robertson v. Hammond Packing Co. 115 Mo. App. 520, 91 S. W. 161.

⁶¹ Devlin v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 87 Mo. 545; Bender v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 137 Mo. 240, 37 S. W. 132; Hurst v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 163 Mo. 303, 85 Am. St. Rep. 539, 63 S. W. 695; Brancs v. St. Louis Car Co. 213 Mo. 698, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 701, 112 S. W. 511; Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. 222 Mo. 489, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1179, 121 S. W. 1; Neves v. Green. 111 Mo. App. 634, 86 S. W. 508.

⁶² Thus, in Herbert v. Mound City Boot & Shoe Co. 90 Mo. App. 305, the court said that the facts of the case may be such that if the servant assumes the risk of unusual dangers in such sense as to preclude him of the phrase, however, is very misleading, for in most jurisdictions there is a very important distinction between the two terms.⁶³

Another variation of the form of statement of the Missouri rule is found in some cases which hold that a servant is not obliged to quit the employment, and does not assume the risk if it is reasonable to suppose or believe that a defective appliance may be safely used by the exercise of ordinary care.⁶⁴

The duty of the master to use ordinary care in furnishing safe instrumentalities and places to his servant is held in some cases to be a continuing duty, so that though the servant may know that the duty has been neglected in the past, the master is not thereby relieved of it, nor does the servant assume the risk.⁶⁵

In Labatt, Master & Servant, p. 730, it is said that the recent courts have shown a tendency to fall in line with those of other jurisdictions, but the more recent decisions do not show such a tendency, and the Missouri doctrine is reasserted again and again without any qualification.

Some courts base the Missouri doctrine upon the ground that it is against public policy for the courts to permit the master to contract against the consequences of his own negligence.⁶⁶

In some decisions the courts have recognized the fact that they are not in harmony with the courts in other jurisdictions,⁶⁷ while others assume that their rule from holding the defendant liable, he is really guilty of contributory negligence.

The conclusion that there can be no assumption of risk where the master is negligent in no way restricts or limits the rule that where the risk is so obviously dangerous that an ordinarily prudent man would refuse to expose himself, and the servant, under such circumstances, proceeds and is injured, he cannot recover. This latter rule, however, does not rest upon the doctrine of assumed risk, but upon the doctrine of contributory negligence. Strickland v. F. W. Woolworth & Co. supra.

⁶³ As to distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence, see notes to Limberg v. Glenwood Lumber Co. 49 L.R.A. 33, and Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 138.

⁶⁴ Huhn v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra; Soeder v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 100 Mo. 673, 18 Am. St. Rep. 724, 13 S. W. 714; Mahaney v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. 108 Mo. 191, 18 S. W. 895; O'Mellia v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. supra; Minnier v. Sedalia, W. & S. W. R. Co. 167 Mo. 99, 66 S. W. 1072; Haviland v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 172 Mo. 106, 72 S. W. 515; Benham v. Taylor, 66 Mo. App. 308; Adams v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 85 Mo. App. 486; Auams v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. and Robbins v. Big Circle Min. Co. supra; Studenroth v. Hammond Packing Co. 106 Mo. App. 480, 81 S. W. 487; Houts v. St. Louis Transit Co. supra.

And in Minnier v. Sedalia, W. & S. W. R. Co. supra, the court said that it was the law, not only in Missouri, but almost universally, that if the master furnishes defective tools, and the servant knows of it, he is not obliged to refuse to use the tools or quit the service of the master, if he reasonably believes that he can use the appliances in safety by means of due care and caution.

⁶⁵ Settle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 127 Mo. 336, 48 Am. St. Rep. 633, 30 S. W. 125; Pauck v. St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Co. 159 Mo. 467, 61 S. W. 806; 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Wendler v. People's House Furnishing Co. 165 Mo. 527, 65 S. W. 737.

⁶⁶ Thus, in Charlton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 200 Mo. 413, 98 S. W. 529, the court said that assumption of risk rests on contract, and a servant cannot, consequently, assume the risk of the master's negligence, because it is a fundamental proposition that it is against public policy for a master to contract against his own negligence.

It is against public policy to allow a master to relieve himself by contract from liability for his own negligence, and what the law forbids to be done by express contract, it will not assist to be done by implying a contract. Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 270, 73 S. W. 167.

The law will not permit any person to contract against his own negligence. Strickland v. F. W. Woolworth & Co. supra.

It is against public policy to permit the master to contract against his own negligence. George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 225 Mo. 364, 125 S. W. 196.

The additional risks produced by the master's negligence are not and cannot be assumed by the servant by express or implied contract. Huston v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. supra.

⁶⁷ Thus, in Clippard v. St. Louis Transit Co. supra, the court, after asserting the Missouri rule, said: "It may be that our court has gone further upon this question than many courts, but we see no reason for now overturning the long line of decisions upon the question."

And in Obermeyer v. F. H. Logeman Chair Mfg. Co. 120 Mo. App. 59, 96 S. W. 673, the court speaks of "the unique doctrine established by our supreme court."

In Chandler v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 127 Mo. App. 34, 106 S. W. 553, it was held that under the Federal law which prevailed in the Indian territory, a servant knowing of a defect must be held to have assumed the risk thereof; but the court added that, had the cause of action arisen in Missouri, there might have been a recovery.

is the generally accepted rule, and apparently do not realize that it is contrary to that recognized in practically every other state.⁶³ That there is, or has been, considerable conflict in the decisions, is recognized in a number of cases.⁶⁴

Some cases deny a recovery, on the ground of assumption of risk, where the ⁶³ Thus, in Dakan v. G. W. Chase & Son Mercantile Co. 197 Mo. 238, 94 S. W. 944, the court said: "Language is sometimes used by text writers and in some judicial opinions which seems to indicate that under the circumstances just mentioned there is an assumption of risk by the servant; but such language is not carefully chosen, or, if it is intended literally as expressed, it does not state the rule of law as declared by this court."

And in Minnier v. Sedalia, W. & S. W. R. Co. supra, the court said: "It is also the law, not only in this state, but almost universally, that if the master fails in his duty to his servant to furnish safe appliances, and if the servant knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care could know, that the appliances furnished are not altogether or reasonably safe, the servant is not obliged to refuse to use the appliances, or quit the service of the master, if he reasonably believes that, by the exercise of proper care and caution, he can safely use the appliances, notwithstanding they are not so reasonably safe; and if he does use them, and exercise such care and caution, and is injured, the servant does not waive his right to compensation for injuries received in consequence, nor is he guilty of contributory negligence."

And in George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 225 Mo. 364, 125 S. W. 196, in which a servant recovered for injuries due to the master's negligence, of which he knew, the court said: "And all the authorities, text writers and courts, unite in holding that if the master negligently fails to furnish his servant such a place, and the latter is injured in consequence thereof, then it cannot be successfully maintained that such injury was the result of a risk assumed by him; but, upon the contrary, such injury must be attributed to the dereliction of duty on the part of the master, and he is liable in damages therefor."

The rule is almost universal that the servant does not assume the negligence of the master who fails in his duty to furnish the servant with reasonably safe instrumentalities to perform his work. O'Brien v. Western Implement Mfg. Co. 141 Mo. App. 331, 125 S. W. 804.

In Lee v. Missouri P. R. Co. 195 Mo. 400, 92 S. W. 614, the court was called upon to decide a case arising in Kansas, and it said that while some Kansas decisions hold that a servant might assume the risks of a known defect, the court in Emporia v. Kowalski, 66 Kan. 64, 71 Pa. 232, laid down the law as to assumption of risk in effect the same as that declared by the Missouri courts. But in the Kansas case the court, after stating in broad terms that the servant never assumed the risk of the master's negligence, was careful to state that the defect was not patent nor observable, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) and was not known and could not have been known by the servant, in the exercise of ordinary care in the performance of his duty. In support of its decision, the Missouri court also cited O'Neill v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Neb. 358, 60 L.R.A. 443, 86 N. W. 1098, but the latter case expressly points out that the servant was ignorant of the defect, and therefore did not assume the risk thereof.

And in Charlton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 200 Mo. 413, 98 S. W. 529, the court, in speaking of the Lee Case, said: "In that case it became necessary to examine the decisions of the supreme court of Kansas, and to ascertain the state of the law on questions of assumed risks and contributory negligence. As a result, it was held that there is no substantial conflict between the decisions of this court and that. We may proceed, therefore, to a consideration of this case, levying tribute and relying indiscriminately on the pronouncements and doctrines of either court."

⁶⁴ Thus, in Marshall v. Kansas City Hay Press Co. 69 Mo. App. 256, it is said that if the doctrine of Fugler v. Bothe, 117 Mo. 475, 22 S. W. 1113, was overruled by Settle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 127 Mo. 342, 48 Am. St. Rep. 633, 30 S. W. 125, it was restored and vitalized by the ruling in Steinhauser v. Spraul, 127 Mo. 541, 27 L.R.A. 441, 28 S. W. 620, 30 S. W. 102. If so, the restoration lasted for a very brief period.

And it was said in Yongue v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 133 Mo. App. 141, 112 S. W. 985, that the doctrine that a servant might assume the risk of the master's negligence was not then in force in that state, although there were some cases of both earlier and later dates which tended to support that view.

And in Garaci v. Hill O'Meara Constr. Co. 124 Mo. App. 709, 102 S. W. 594, the court recognized the fact that many of the courts had adopted the rule that a servant with knowledge may assume the risk of dangers, even if created by the master's negligence; but states that such is not the rule adopted by the Missouri supreme court. In regard to the conflict existing in some Missouri decisions, the court said: "It appeared to us that the court adverted to the former rule as hereinbefore stated in Mathis v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. 185 Mo. 434, 84 S. W. 66, and we followed it, announcing our views in Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. 112 Mo. App. 372, 87 S. W. 12; but since that adjudication, the court of last resort has reiterated the ruling in the earlier cases, in Blundell v. Wm. A. Miller Elevator Mfg. Co. 189 Mo. 552, 88 S. W. 103."

"Those of the profession, either on the bench or at the bar, who have had occasion in the past to investigate the adjudications in Missouri upon that department of the injury results from the manner in which the master conducts his business, even though there might be a safer way of doing it.⁷⁰ But the scope of the rule which affords immunity to the master while conducting his business in his own way is confined within the limits of reasonable care.⁷¹

Even under the Missouri doctrine, a servant assumes the risk of defects which it is his duty to discover and repair.⁷²

law treated of as assumption of the risk will have discovered a wonderful conflict, and those who may in the future be called upon to examine the cases in search of precedents will no doubt be able to find able and well-considered opinions by learned judges which can be used as authority on either side of pending questions arising in this branch of our jurisprudence." Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. supra.

⁷⁰ Bradley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 138 Mo. 293, 39 S. W. 763; Harrington v. Wabash R. Co. 104 Mo. App. 603, 78 S. W. 662; Saversnick v. Schwarzschild & Sulsburger, 141 Mo. App. 509, 125 S. W. 1192.

⁷¹ Shore v. American Bridge Co. 111 Mo. App. 278, 86 S. W. 905.

Within the somewhat wide limits of reasonable care, a master may conduct his business in his own way, and the risks of injury from such methods are risks assumed by the servant as a part of the contract of employment. Dickerson v. Jenkins (Mo. App.) 128 S. W. 280; and to the same effect was the decision in Sutherland v. Garetson-Greaseon Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 130 S. W. 40.

⁷² Roberts v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 166 Mo. 370, 66 S. W. 155.

So, a servant employed to handle defective cars as well as sound cars cannot recover for injuries due to defects in a car, of which he has been advised. Hager v. Terminal R. Asso. 207 Mo. 302, 105 S. W. 744.

⁷³ Thus, where the plaintiff was injured in using a defective clawbar, the court in Harris v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. (Mo. App.) 124 S. W. 576, although admitting that the defendant was negligent in furnishing the plaintiff with the defective tool, nevertheless held that the plaintiff assumed the risk of using the bar in the manner that he did, although the court expressly stated that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. After speaking of the conflict apparent among the Missouri cases, the court said that it believed that there was a distinct doctrine with respect to the risks assumed by a servant engaged in performing a commonplace work with a simple appliance, a defect in which is well known to the servant, when an injury occurs through the manner and mode of using the appliance, and it might have been averted by performing the work in another way.

In Fugler v. Bothe, supra, the opinion of Judge Rombauer, which was approved, by the supreme court, stated that the case 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

As has been stated, the Missouri doctrine has not been accepted to its fullest extent in all of the later cases. One apparent modification is where the servant is injured by a simple tool furnished by the master.⁷³ But in many jurisdictions a rule prevails that the master is not responsible for injuries to his servant caused by defects in simple tools, and it may be possible that this group of Missouri cases proceeded upon was one in which the servant, who was injured by the falling of a plank upon which he was standing, knew of the danger much better than did the master. However, it must be said that the decision seems to tend very strongly to repudiate the so-called Missouri doctrine.

Steinhauser v. Spraul, supra, was a case of a ladder which was too short for the use to which it was put by the servant. The majority of the court agreed upon reversing the judgment for the plaintiff, but upon different grounds, and the opinion is of little value upon this point, but it certainly cannot be said to support the Missouri rule.

One of the latest cases in the Missouri supreme court, in which the so-called Missouri doctrine is apparently limited, or, at least, is not applied to its broadest extent, is Mathis v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. supra. Here the alleged defective appliance was a plank used by an engineer to stand upon in order to reach parts of the engine, and it was held that the plaintiff assumed the risk thereof, as he knew and appreciated the danger. The dissenting opinion, however, proceeds upon the theory that the question was wholly as to the defendant's negligence, and took the view that the majority did not properly consider that question. The prevailing opinion is not very explicit as to just what rules of law it is intended to apply, but from the minority opinion it seems clear that the majority proceeded upon the theory that the master was not negligent, and the "assumption of risk" spoken of had reference to the ordinary incidental risks of the employment. But in Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. supra, it is said that in the Mathis Case the court reverted to the old doctrine, and revived so much of the law of assumption of risk as rests upon the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria, or assent to risk, apart from the ordinary hazard of the employment, which is assumed by implication in the contract. The later Missouri opinions, however, do not recognize the Mathis Case as repudiating the Missouri doctrine. Blundell v. Wm. A. Miller Elevator Mfg. Co., and Garaci v. Hill O'Meara Constr. Co. supra.

In Holloran v. Union Iron & Foundry Co. 133 Mo. 470, 35 S. W. 260, the servant was held to have assumed the risk, but he was at work on an unfinished building, and there is at least a suggestion that the only damage was due to that fact, and not to the negligence of the master.

the theory that the master had not been negligent in respect to such tools, and if this hypothesis is true, then this group of cases would not be opposed to the Missouri doctrine. In a few cases, the so-called Missouri doctrine is expressly repudiated.⁷⁴ In other cases there is dicta to the effect that the servant may assume the risk of the master's negligence.⁷⁵ And in very many of the earlier cases the court, without discussion of the question, apparently proceeds upon the theory that a servant may assume the risk of the master's negligence; but these cases can be of little authority upon the question, in view of the large number of cases which expressly uphold the Missouri doctrine, and which number includes nearly every one of the more recent decisions.

In numerous Missouri cases the servant has been held to have assumed the risks of the danger causing the injury, inasmuch as it was ordinarily incident to the service; and in other cases he has been held not to have assumed risks of which, as a matter of fact, he was ignorant. These cases would, of course, add nothing to the discussion, for all authorities agree that the ordinary risks incident to the service are assumed by the very contract of employment, and that a servant never assumes extraordinary risks of which he has no knowledge, actual or constructive.

In many of the earlier Missouri decisions the court does not pass upon the question of the master's negligence, and it is impossible to say whether he was considered negligent, so as to afford any opportunity for the application of the Missouri doctrine.

The North Carolina rule.

In North Carolina the courts have enunciated a distinct doctrine, which, however, arrives at the same practical result as that reached by the Missouri courts in applying the so-called Missouri doctrine; and in fact, in stating the rule, they employ the same language as is used in a large number of the Missouri courts.

According to this North Carolina doctrine, a servant does not assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence merely because he knows of them, but is held to assume such risks only when a reasonably prudent man would refuse to continue at work in face of the danger. Such a rule, as has been stated in connection with the discussion of the Missouri doctrine, in effect abolishes the distinction

⁷⁴In Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co. 115 Mo. App. 297, 91 S. W. 460, second appeal, 130 Mo. App. 128, 108 S. W. 1128, the court expressly denies that it is the rule, either of that court or of the Missouri supreme court, that in no case does the servant assume the risk of the master's negligence. The court goes on to say: "Nearly or about all, and possibly all, of those risks which are assumed by the servant, aside from those ordinarily incident, etc., upon the doctrine of knowledge of and assent to the risk, arising under that branch of the law under this head, resting upon the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria, are risks which arise by the negligence of the master; and that there may be an assumption in such case is beyond controversy. . . . Such risks are treated as extra hazards, and the servant's assumption thereof is predicated upon the theory of his knowledge and appreciation of the dangers, and voluntary assent thereto, as happily expressed in the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria, involving the idea that he who consents cannot receive an injury."

But in a concurring opinion, Goode, J., notes the two lines of conflicting cases in that state, and says that the latest decision of the supreme court in that state (Blundell v. Wm. A. Miller Electric Mfg. Co. supra), adhered to the so-called Missouri doctrine, and consequently he could not entirely concur in the opinion of the majority, but did concur in the result.

In Moore v. St. Louis Wire Mill Co. 55 Mo. App. 491, the court, citing Fugler v. Rothe, supra, said: "We are, therefore, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

justified in the belief that we will hear nothing more of the 'immediate-and-threatening-danger doctrine.'"

⁷⁵Thus, in Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188, the language used seems to imply that the court adopted the general, and not the Missouri, rule, but this is dicta, for, at the close of the opinion, the court expressly says that the injuries were due to the servant's own negligence.

Another recent Missouri decision which apparently repudiates the so-called Missouri doctrine is Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. 222 Mo. 488, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1179, 121 S. W. 1. In this case the servant attempted to hold the master liable for the latter's failure to fulfil his promise to add certain safety appliances to machinery, but it appeared that the master was under no duty to furnish such appliances, unless that duty had been created by his mere promise to furnish them. The court held that there was no such duty on the part of the master, and consequently the question of the servant's assumption of risk of the master's negligence did not arise in the case; but the court enunciated a doctrine at variance with the so-called Missouri doctrine. The court said: "If the servant, before he enters the service, knows, or if he afterwards discovers, or, by the exercise of ordinary observation or reasonable skill or diligence in his department of service, he may discover, that the machine or appliances in connection with which he is to labor are unsafe or unfit, and if, notwithstanding such knowledge, he voluntarily enters into or continues in the employment without objection or complaint, between assumption of risk and contributory negligence, but retains the terminology, and thus adds to the confusion upon this subject.⁷⁶

In a few of the more recent decisions in North Carolina, the court has gone to the extent of holding that a servant does not assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence if he knows of them, he is deemed to assume the risk of danger thus known, and to waive any damages against the master in case it shall result in injury to him."

⁷⁶One of the fullest discussions of the North Carolina rule is found in Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co. 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703, where it is held that if the master is negligent in regard to appliances and tools furnished to his employees, and such negligence is the proximate cause of the injury to the employee, the latter shall not be barred of recovery by the mere fact that he may be aware of the increased danger, and is barred only when the danger is so great and imminent that his conduct in reality amounts to contributory negligence. The court said that the test is whether or not, under the facts and attendant circumstances, including the nature of the defect and danger, the risk is one which a reasonable man should incur by continuing to work under existing conditions.

And the court in Pressly v. Dover Yarn Mills, 138 N. C. 410, 51 S. E. 69, after referring to the doctrine of the Hicks Case, said: "This is, in effect, referring the question of assumption of risk, where the injury is caused by the negligent failure of the employer to furnish a safe and suitable appliance, to the principles of contributory negligence."

There appears to be no equivocation in the language used by the court in Marks v. Harriet Cotton Mills, 138 N. C. 401, 50 S. E. 769, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 812, when it says that if the defendant seeks to avoid the result of its negligence in changing its method of work by requiring the servant to clean up a machine while it is running, instead of stopping it for that purpose, then it must go further than simply show a knowledge of the change and an appreciation of the danger, and also show that a reasonably prudent man would not, under like circumstances, have operated the machine; and this would be a question for the jury.

"It is only where a machine is so grossly or clearly defective that the employee must know of the extra risk that he can be deemed to have voluntarily and knowingly assumed the risk." Sims v. Lindsay, 122 N. C. 678, 30 S. E. 19. This is quoted with approval in Lloyd v. Hanes, 126 N. C. 359, 35 S. E. 611, and the court goes on to say that if one takes service with a railroad company which, under the North Carolina 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) and that the only defense in an action for such injuries is the plaintiff's own contributory negligence.⁷⁷

It has been frequently stated by the court in North Carolina that a plaintiff will not be held to have assumed the risk in undertaking to perform a dangerous work unless the act itself is so obviously dangerous that in its careful performance decisions, is guilty of negligence per se in failing to use automatic couplers, this would not absolve the railroad company from liability for its negligence in not using the safety device. "The doctrine of 'assumption of risk' is more reasonable, and extends no further than that, if a particular machine has become injured or dangerous, and the employee, seeing the danger, does not report its condition, but goes on with his work in disregard of it, he assumes the risk." In failing to report a defect discovered in the course of his employment, the servant might well be deemed guilty of contributory negligence.

In Bolden v. Southern R. Co. 123 N. C. 614, 31 S. E. 851, assumption of risk is spoken of as a distinct affirmative defense, but without any discussion as to what the distinction is.

Of course, where the servant does not know of the defect, and he is charged with no duty of inspection, there can be no question of risk under the North Carolina doctrine. Womble v. Merchants' Grocery Co. 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493.

⁷⁷Thus, in Bennett v. Caroline Mfg. Co. 147 N. C. 620, 61 S. E. 463, the court held that it is settled that the servant does not assume the risk of injury arising from his master's negligence, although in this case the servant, as a matter of fact, knew of the defect and appreciated the danger.

And in Sibbert v. Scotland Cotton Mills, 145 N. C. 308, 59 S. E. 79, the court said that if the machinery became defective after the plaintiff began to work, he was not required to abandon his employment,—he did not assume the risk incident to danger by reason of the master's negligence.

And in Leggett v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (N. C.) 67 S. E. 249, the court said: "The doctrine of assumption of risk has no application here, for it is not contended by plaintiff that he is entitled to recover unless he should satisfy the jury that the cause of the death of his intestate was the negligence of the defendant. It is elementary that while an employee assumes all those risks naturally incidental to the work, he does not assume those arising exclusively from his master's negligence."

Attention should be called to chapter 56 of the Private Laws of 1897 of North Carolina, which applies solely to railroad companies, and which was held to be valid in Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. 128 N. C. 534, 57 L.R.A. 817, 39 S. E. 43, rehearing 129 N. C. 407, 57 L.R.A. 834, 40 S. E. 195. The court further held that it removed, the inherent probabilities of injury are greater than those of safety.⁷⁶

In a number of the earlier North Carolina cases, the court discusses the question of the servant's contributory negligence, but ignores the question of assumption of risk, although it would appear that the facts present a case in which the latter doctrine might be applied, or, at least, a contention that it did apply might well be made.⁷⁹

In a few cases the trial court, in its charge to the jury, gave the general rule as to the assumption of the risks, either separately or in connection with the North Carolina rule; but in these cases the judgment was in favor of the servant, and consequently the appellate court was not called upon to pass upon the correctness of the charge, which was more favorable to the appellant than the so-called North Carolina rule.⁸⁰

It has been said that there are two distinct defenses of contributory negligence which the master may rely upon to defeat a recovery for injuries caused by his negligence: First, where the servant has been guilty of contributory negligence in remaining in the employment which exposed him to the risk in question; second, where the servant has been guilty of contributory negligence in respect to the particular act which was the immediate cause of his injury.⁸¹ And it may be that the North Carolina courts have in mind the first defense when they speak of the servant's assuming the risk when he remains at work under conditions which should cause a reasonably prudent man to cease. This seems to be a reasonable inference to be drawn from some of the decisions.⁸² But it is certainly misleading to use the term in a sense entirely different from that in which it is ordinarily used. Furthermore, the test used to determine the servant's assumption of risk in that sense is the same test universally applied to determine contributory negligence; viz., was the servant's conduct that of a reasonably prudent man, acting with due regard for his own safety?

Statutes abolishing or abrogating assumption of risk.

Some statutes have expressly abolished, either wholly or in part, the defense of assumption of risk in cases where the master has been negligent. Thus, the New York statute⁸³ provides that in any action brought for personal injuries or for death from any cause, "including open and visible defects," the fact that an employee continues in the service of the employer after he has discovered or been informed thereof shall not be an assumption of the risk of injury therefrom, either as a matter of fact or as a matter of law. This provision, however, does not apply in case the so far as railroads were concerned, the defense of assumption of risk where injuries were caused by defects in machinery, ways, or appliances, as it expressly provided that any contract or agreement, express or implied, to waive the benefit of the law, should be null and void; but as the defense of contributory negligence is based upon tort, and not upon contract, this defense is not taken away by the statute.

⁷⁶ Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. supra; Orr v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 691, 44 S. E. 401; Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co. supra; Rushing v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 149 N. C. 158, 63 S. E. 890.

⁷⁹ Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 76 N. C. 320; Bean v. Western North Carolina R. Co. 107 N. C. 731, 12 S. E. 600; Cox v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 123 N. C. 604, 31 S. E. 848.

⁸⁰ Jones v. American Warehouse Co. 138 N. C. 546, 51 S. E. 106; Wilkie v. Raleigh & C. F. R. Co. 127 N. C. 203, 37 S. E. 204.

⁸¹ Labatt, Mast. & S. 581.

⁸² Thus, in Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co. 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703, the court says that it must not be considered that all distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence has been done away with, but does not make clear in what cases the defense of assumption of risk might be available to the master where the defense of contributory negligence would not be. After stating that it is sometimes desirable that the two defenses should be submitted to the jury under separate issues, the court said: "It is only where the sole default imputable to the employee arises from the fact that he has continued to work in the presence of a known defect and observed danger that the question is immaterial, and may be submitted under the one issue or the other."

And in Rittenhouse v. Wilmington Street R. Co. 120 N. C. 544, 26 S. E. 922, the court said that the issue of contributory negligence embraces both carelessness on the part of the servant, and also the reckless remaining in the place of danger; or, as it is there termed, reckless assumption of risk.

Some suggestion of a similar meaning of the phrase "assumption of risk" is made in Silvia v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 203 Mass. 519, 89 N. E. 1061, where the court said: "It is contended that the plaintiff assumed the risk in the sense in which the expression is used in connection with the question whether a plaintiff was in the exercise of due care; that is, that, knowing all about the conditions, and knowing that there was danger, he went on taking his chances when the chances were such that due care required him to stop."

⁸³ Laws 1910, chap. 352, § 202.

employee, upon discovering a defect, does not report it within a reasonable time to the master, unless it appears that the master already knows of it, or should have known of it by a reasonable inspection. It would seem that a failure to report defects after a discovery thereof might easily be referred to contributory negligence.

In Texas, the statute⁸⁴ provides that in suits by employees against railroads for personal injuries caused by their wrong or negligence, the plea of assumed risk, where the ground of the plea is knowledge or means of knowledge of the defect and danger, shall not be available in the following cases: First, where the employee, having an opportunity so to do, shall have informed the master of the defect if he does not already know of it; second, where a person of ordinary care would have continued in the service with a knowledge of the defect and danger.

In North Carolina, the statute⁸⁵ provides that any servant or employee who shall suffer injury by the negligence, carelessness, or incompetency of any other servant, employee, or agent of the company, or by any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances of the company, shall be entitled to maintain an action against such company. This statute has been held valid, and to take away the ordinary defense of assumption of risk, notwithstanding the servant may have known of the danger.⁸⁶

Statutes of the character of the one in North Carolina are not to be confused with other statutes which specifically impose some duty upon the master, and which, under the rules adopted by some states, eliminate the defense of assumption of risk in case the master has failed to perform that duty imposed by statute. Under the North Carolina statute the defense is taken away, even though the particular duty violated by the master is not one imposed by statute.

Summary

In conclusion it may be stated that the general rule is that a servant assumes the risk of the master's negligence where, with knowledge thereof, he continues in the employment without complaint and promise to repair on the part of the master; the contrary rule prevails by the weight of authority at the present time in Missouri, and a rule which leads to the same practical result also prevails in North Carolina. The apparent great conflict among the decisions outside of the two states named is due almost entirely to two very evident causes: First, the use of the phrase "assumption of risk" in two distinct senses, one of which has no reference to a case in which the master is negligent; second, the use by the courts of broad statements which are correct as applied to the particular situation with which the court is dealing, but, taken out of their setting, and applied to other states of fact, are incorrect and entirely misleading.

It is suggested that both of these causes of confusion could be easily removed if the courts would briefly designate the particular sense in which the term is used, and would, in making the broad statement that a servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence, expressly limit the statement to the facts of the case at bar, and thus give no opportunity for the possible but incorrect inference that it was intended to be taken literally as an unqualified rule. It is suggested, also, that it would be still better if the courts would cease to use the term altogether to designate, on the one hand, merely the idea embraced in the rule that the master is not an insurer, and, on the other hand, what is nothing more than one phrase of contributory negligence. In such a case, the term "assumption of risk" could be used to designate that particular affirmative defense which the master relies upon to relieve himself from responsibility for his negligence where the servant, although not guilty of contributory negligence, yet, with knowledge of the master's negligence, remains in the service. In this latter use it has a peculiar, distinctive meaning which is entirely distinct from either of the other defenses mentioned above.

The doctrine of assumption of risk frequently works great hardship upon the servant, who is often driven to work under dangerous conditions because he feels that he must retain the employment to gain a livelihood for himself and his family. This fact is recognized by many courts even in applying the rule, and denying a recovery on that ground. And again it has been said that the doctrine operates most effectually in favor of the master who most openly neglects his primary duties to the servant. But the courts are not the makers of the law, and must apply the law as they find it. Owing to the unquestionable hardship frequently worked by the doctrine, and the ever-increasing dangers of modern industry, it may well be that the other states will follow the example of New York, and abol-⁸⁴ Gen. Laws 1905, chap. 163, p. 386.

⁸⁵ Private Laws 1897, chap. 56.

⁸⁶ 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

⁸⁶ Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. supra.

ish the defense both as a matter of law and as a matter of fact where the master has been negligent, thus adopting the so-called "unique" doctrine of Missouri.

W. M. G.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

ARTHUR McKENZIE, Resp't.,
v.
NORTH COAST COLLIERY COMPANY,
Appt.

(55 Wash. 495, 104 Pac. 801.)

Servant — miner — unsafe timbering.

1. A miner does not assume the risk of the unsafe timbering of the mine, although the timbers are set by the miners themselves, where it is done under the supervision of the boss and they are paid extra for such work.

Same — unsafe battery — master's liability.

2. A miner working on a slope does not assume the risk of injury from the unsafe condition of a battery or dam maintained above him to keep loosened materials from rolling upon him, where such condition could only be discovered by examination, since the duty to maintain it in a safe condition is upon the master.

Same — inspection.

3. A mine owner owes the duty to his servants who are working on a slope in the mine to inspect batteries or dams which are erected to prevent loosened materials from rolling down on them, to see that they are reasonably safe.

Same — fellow servant — negligence.

4. That a battery or dam in a mine to prevent loosened material from rolling down a slope upon miners working below was erected by the miners themselves does not relieve the master from liability to one of them who is injured by its insufficiency, where he had no part in its construction.

Trial — contradictory instructions — right to complain.

5. One who asked erroneous instructions which were given cannot complain that they contradicted other instructions which were also given by the court.

Note. — As to servant's assumption of risk of changing conditions of the working place during progress of work, see note to Citrone v. O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340. Upon the question, May a servant assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, see note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. ante, 1207. As to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servant, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, post, 1250.
28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — particulars.

6. The court cannot enter into particulars in instructing the jury in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, so as to inform them just what acts would be negligent and what would not.

Damages — excess — reduction.

7. An award of $30,000 to a miner, twenty-four years old when injured, and who was earning about $150 per month, will be reduced on appeal to $22,000, although the lower part of his body is paralyzed so that he can move about only on crutches and has no control over his bowels and urinary organs, where the testimony shows that time may effect a slight improvement in his condition.

(November 4, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed on condition of remission of damages.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kerr & McCord, for appellant:

The plaintiff assumed the risk of the unsafe timbering.

Roccia v. Black Diamond Coal Min. Co. 57 C. C. A. 587, 121 Fed. 451; Harvey v. Mountain Pride Gold Min. Co. 18 Colo. App. 234, 70 Pac. 1001; Cully v. Northern P. R. Co. 35 Wash. 245, 77 Pac. 202; Kreigh v. Westinghouse, C. K. & Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 684, 81 C. C. A. 338, 152 Fed. 120; Glenmont Lumber Co. v. Roy, 61 C. C. A. 506, 126 Fed. 524; Breckinridge & P. Syndicate v. Murphy, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 915, 38 S. W. 700; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 609; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Bokamp, 181 Ill. 1, 54 N. E. 571.

A temporary room in a mine, formed by excavation of ore, and used as a working place to get out ore lying around its sides, is not within the rule requiring the master to furnish a safe place for his servant to work in.

Petaja v. Aurora Iron Min. Co. 106 Mich. 463, 32 L.R.A. 435, 64 N. W. 335, 66 N. W. 951; Oleson v. Maple Grove Coal & Min. Co. 115 Iowa, 74, 87 N. W. 736; Island Coal Co. v. Greenwood, 151 Ind. 476, 50 N. E. 36; Holland v. Durham Coal & Coke Co. 131 Ga. 715, 63 S. E. 290; Coal & Min. Co. v. Clay (Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd) 51 Ohio St. 542, 25 L.R.A. 856, 38 N. E. 610; Smith v. Hecla Min. Co. 38 Wash. 454, 80 Pac. 779; Finalyson v. Utica Min. & Mill. Co. 14 C. C. A. 492, 32 U. S. App. 143, 67 Fed. 510; Knight v. Cooper, 36 W. Va. 232, 14 S. E. 999; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Percy, 128 Ind. 197, 27 N. E. 479; Hanley v. California Bridge & Constr. Co.

127 Cal. 232, 47 L.R.A. 597, 59 Pac. 577; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017; Vaughn v. California C. R. Co. 83 Cal. 18, 23 Pac. 215; Heald v. Wallace, 109 Tenn. 346, 71 S. W. 80.

Messrs. Brady & Rummens and George H. Bailey, for respondent:

The servant may rely upon the superior knowledge of the master, and may believe that the master will not expose him to unnecessary dangers.

Christianson v. Pacific Bridge Co. 27 Wash. 582, 68 Pac. 191; Hilgar v. Walla Walla, 50 Wash. 470, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 367, 97 Pac. 498; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Percy, 128 Ind. 197, 27 N. E. 479; Hanley v. California Bridge & Constr. Co. 127 Cal. 232, 47 L.R.A. 597, 59 Pac. 577; Kelley v. Fourth of July Min. Co. 16 Mont. 484, 41 Pac. 273.

If an entry or room in a mine has been made so that the employees must pass to and fro in it, or must be engaged in working in a place thus permanent or quasi permanent in character, the general rule is that the duty of the master to provide a safe place to work ought to apply.

Holland v. Durham Coal & Coke Co. 131 Ga. 715, 63 S. E. 290; Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. Pouch, 61 C. C. A. 40, 124 Fed. 148; Union P. R. Co. v. Jarvi, 3 C. C. A. 433, 10 U. S. App. 439, 53 Fed. 65.

Workmen in a mine have a right to look to the master for a discharge of his duty to see that the working places in a mine, where props are necessary to keep the mine from caving in, are propped, and that the working places are frequently inspected to ascertain whether the props are put up, and to see that the workmen put the props up as the work progresses; and a failure to perform that duty is negligence.

Green v. Western American Co. 30 Wash. 87, 70 Pac. 310; Costa v. Pacific Coast Co. 26 Wash. 138, 66 Pac. 398; Shannon v. Consolidated Tiger & P. Min. Co. 24 Wash. 119, 64 Pac. 169; Christianson v. Pacific Bridge Co. and Hilgar v. Walla Walla, supra; Western Stone Co. v. Muscial, 196 Ill. 382, 89 Am. St. Rep. 325, 63 N. E. 665; Kelley v. Fourth of July Min. Co. supra; Barnett & R. Co. v. Schlapka, 208 Ill. 426, 70 N. E. 343; Jancko v. West Coast Mfg. & Invest. Co. 34 Wash. 556, 76 Pac. 78; DeMase v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 40 Wash. 108, 82 Pac. 170; Gundlach v. Schott, 192 Ill. 509, 85 Am. St. Rep. 348, 61 N. E. 332; Bunker Hill & S. Min. & Concentrating Co. v. Jones, 65 C. C. A. 363, 130 Fed. 813; Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. Pouch, supra.

Having knowledge of the defects, the defendant assumed the risk of all dangers to plaintiff from such defects while he was working under the battery.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 3 Wash. Terr. 353, 19 Pac. 25; McMillan v. North Star Min. Co. 32 Wash. 579, 98 Am. St. Rep. 908, 73 Pac. 685; Shannon v. Consolidated Tiger & P. Min. Co. supra; Johnson v. Bellingham Bay Improv. Co. 13 Wash. 455, 43 Pac. 370; Island Coal Co. v. Risher, 13 Ind. App. 98, 40 N. E. 158; Dixon v. Bausman, 17 Wash. 304, 49 Pac. 540; Parke County Coal Co. v. Barth, 5 Ind. App. 159, 31 N. E. 585; Mosgrove v. Zimbleman Coal Co. 110 Iowa, 169, 81 N. W. 227; Ross v. Shanley, 185 Ill. 390, 56 N. E. 1105; Himrod Coal Co. v. Clark, 197 Ill. 514, 64 N. E. 282.

The duty to guard against defects and want of repair in appliances is a continuing one, and the master is chargeable with knowledge of all defects which might have been discovered upon reasonable inspection.

1 Dresser, Employers' Liability, p. 195; Green v. Western American Co. and Himrod Coal Co. v. Clark, supra.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages for personal injuries received by respondent while employed as a miner in the appellant's coal mine. The pertinent allegations of the complaint were as follows: That, in order to render the chutes of said mine a safe place in which to work, it was necessary that the walls of said chutes, after the pillars of coal had been excavated, be pressed and held apart by means of timbers and appliances; that on the 21st day of October, 1907, while the plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant and engaged in digging coal from the pillars at chute 14 between crosscuts 2 and 3 in said mine, by reason of the negligence of the defendant in failing to provide the plaintiff with a safe place in which to work, by reason of its negligence in failing to keep the walls in and about chutes 12, 13, and 14, and between them and above the place where plaintiff was working, when the pillars had been drawn, securely timbered, braced, and held apart and in place, the coal, stone, and earth of said walls, above the place where the plaintiff was working, without fault on the part of the plaintiff and without warning to him, gave way and fell down upon the plaintiff and crushed him, and caused the injuries hereinafter alleged. The answer put in issue the charge that the defendant had failed to furnish plaintiff a safe place in which to work, and set up affirmatively assumption of risk, contributory negligence, and the negligence of fellow servants. The cause was tried to a jury, the defendant's motion for an instructed verdict was denied, and the trial resulted in a verdict in behalf of plaintiff for $30,000. A motion for a new trial having been by the court overruled and judgment entered, the defendant appeals to this court.

In order to make the complaint intelligible, it is necessary to give a brief description of the mine. The vein of coal lay at an angle of 85 degrees to the gangway. The vein being worked was 9 feet thick. A slope had been driven down on the vein at a workable angle, and the coal was blocked off into squares in the usual way. The gangway was tunneled in from the side of the mountain, and from said gangway, at distances 35 feet apart, chutes 5 by 6 feet were driven up through the middle, a distance of about 200 feet. These chutes were intersected every 25 or 30 feet by crosscuts 4 feet square. These crosscuts were for the double purpose of admitting air to the operatives and the removal of timber used in the propping of the mine. In removing the coal two miners worked in each chute, beginning at the top of the upper crosscut and working toward the main gangway below. Each miner removed the coal to the center of the block on his side of the chute. The props were set about 3 feet apart throughout the mine, and immediately above each crosscut the miners built a battery to protect themselves against the fall of coal, rock, and débris which was constantly falling by reason of the squeezing and settling of the walls. Upon the removal of the soft coal at the center of the vein, the walls began to squeeze together and loosen the coal. It is conceded that no limitation was placed upon the use of timbers by the miners, and that the timber was furnished for that purpose.

While the record in this case is very voluminous, and the disagreement of counsel as to what the record shows has necessitated a careful examination of the whole, and while the case is important not only by reason of its practical results on the coal mining business, but by reason of the size of the verdict, most of the practical questions involved have been settled by the verdict of the jury. For instance, on the question which seems to have been deemed vital by the learned counsel for appellant, viz., whether the falling mass which injured the respondent came directly from above battery B, located just above crosscut 4, in chute 14, or whether it started from chute 13 and on its descent bore westward and entered chute 14, above where respondent was working, there is a sharp conflict of testimony, and, without stopping to review it, it is plain that there was competent testimony from unimpeached witnesses tending to establish each conflicting theory. This was admitted by counsel for appellant in his motion for an instructed verdict, when he stated that under the proofs before the jury the caving or falling of the coal, rock, and débris through the falling of which respondent was injured came either, under the proofs of the respondent, from a point above battery B, or it came, as shown from the testimony of the appellant, from chute 13 in the mine. So that, whatever the responsibility may have been in either event, the case comes here on the legally established fact that the injury was done to respondent from coal and rock falling from a point above battery B, and therefore necessarily by reason of the breaking of battery B. The same thing may be said of the condition of battery B both before and after the accident. And so as to the notice that was given to Nesbit, the pit boss, of the dangerous condition of said battery B just prior to the time when the respondent commenced work in chute 14, and also during the time that he was working there. If the jury believed the testimony of Arthur Provence and Dan McKenzie, discarding altogether the deposition of Campbell McPherson, which seems to be a little contradictory, it would have been fully justified in concluding that the mass in question fell from battery B; that battery B was in a dangerous condition when respondent went to work in chute 14; that Nesbit, the pit boss, knew of this condition; that respondent did not know of it, but worked under the explicit charge and directions of Nesbit. And it has by its verdict said that it did believe their testimony in these particulars. So that they must be accepted here as the facts of the case.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

It also appears from the testimony of the appellant, through its representative Nesbit, the pit boss, that it was his duty to inspect the mine where these men were working, and that the duty was his alone, as shown by the following excerpt from his testimony on cross-examination:

Q. You go in there, don't you, Harry, for the purpose of seeing how the timbers and things are looking, and how the batteries are, and whether the place is safe, and whether the miners propped it up all right?

A. Yes; to see that the men are working.

Q. Yes; to see that they are doing it all right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is not only to protect yourselves, but to protect the working place of the mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were the only man that was doing that?

A. Yes, sir.

It also appears from the testimony of respondent's witnesses that, while the miners did the timbering and set the props, such work was done under the direction and control of the boss, who passed upon its efficiency and sufficiency. That it was not a part of the men's work for which they received compensation is shown by the fact that what work they did of that kind the boss paid them extra for. In the light of these facts, there is no assumption of risk on the part of the respondent, and the court did not commit error in refusing appellant's motion for an instructed verdict.

The appellant insists that the doctrine of safe place is not applicable to a coal mine, and relies upon Smith v. Hecla Min. Co. 38 Wash. 454, 80 Pac. 779, to sustain that contention. But we think the trial court properly interpreted that case, and it does not appear from an examination of the opinion that it was the intention of the court to announce the bald rule that the doctrine of a safe place did not apply under any circumstances to a coal mine; but simply announced that, under some circumstances, it was the duty of the servant to investigate. The portion of the instruction which the court was criticizing in that case was as follows: "It is sufficient to say, however, that the law does not under any circumstances exact from the servant the use of diligence in ascertaining such defects, but charges him with knowledge of such only as are open to his observation. Beyond this he has a right to assume without inquiry or investigation that his employer has discharged his duty of furnishing him with a reasonably safe place in which to perform his duties,"—regarding which this court said: "The meaning of much of this instruction is obscure. The last part thereof is clearly erroneous. The law does require the servant to use some diligence in ascertaining defects, and in protecting himself from the dangers to be reasonably apprehended therefrom,—such diligence and care as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same circumstances. He must, to protect himself from injury, use diligence commensurate with the dangers known by him to be incident to the character and place of work wherein he is employed." It would be doing injustice to the reputation of the court to conclude that it intended to make the announcement that under no circumstances would the doctrine of safe place apply to the operation of a coal mine. There can be nothing sacred about a coal mine, as such, which relieves it from liability under circumstances which would create a liability on the part of other employers. The court in the Smith Case, supra, in the course of its argument, pointed out the fact that coal mining was known to be fraught with danger. But many other employments are also fraught with danger. In fact, it may be said that every employment is fraught with some danger. So that, after all, it is simply a question of degree, and the amount of care which the servant must exercise is equally a question of degree. The principle is the same in one employment as another, and the circumstances surrounding each particular case must be considered before it can be determined whether the servant can absolutely rely on the doctrine of safe place, whether he cannot rely upon it at all, but in staying in the employment assumes the risk, or whether the reliance upon the master and his own caution are to some extent mutual. There is such a dissimilarity in the way in which coal itself is mined that the same rule in regard to the assumption of risk cannot be applied. In mining a flat vein of coal, where the miner stands facing the breast of coal in which he is digging, one kind of danger is to be apprehended. But where he is digging in a vein which is nearly perpendicular, and is on the top of the coal, another character of danger may beset him. In this case, as we have seen, he was digging from the top of the chute down. The employment might appropriately be likened to the digging of a well, with the exception that that which he dug was taken out below instead of being hoisted above for exit. So that it might as well be said, in a case where the servant is injured through the alleged negligence of the master in not maintaining safe appliances for hoisting, or in not making provision to prevent the caving of the earth in the body of the wall, that the doctrine of safe place did not apply to well digging.

The first case cited by appellant, viz., Roccia v. Black Diamond Coal Min. Co. 57 C. C. A. 567, 121 Fed. 451, we think does not sustain its contention. In that case the court laid down the rule, which is unquestionably correct, that, if the workman exposes himself to dangers that are so threatening or obvious as likely to cause injury at any moment, he is, notwithstanding any promise of his employer, guilty of contributory negligence if he remain at the work. In other words, as the court said: "He assumes the risk of the danger which he knows and appreciates." This decision followed the case of District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 29 L. ed. 946, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 884, where the same principle was announced. But what were the circumstances to which this rule was applied? The court said: "Plaintiff in error was an experienced miner, and had been for years at work in the mine. It was his special duty to timber the mine and to look out for and remedy the very dangers which caused his injury. No one in the mine knew so well as he the perils to which in this particular occupation he was exposed. This is not a case where an employee, unaware of the perilous nature of his employment, remains at work under a request for or promise of assistance of the master; nor is it the case of one who was under disability or was incapable of estimating the danger. The dangers were such as in his regular employment it was his duty to deal with. They were confessedly visible and obvious to him. They were the natural result of the progress of the work of mining." But in the case at bar, instead of being the special duty of respondent to look after the batteries and other supports, it was the special duty of the pit boss, not only according to the testimony of respondent's witnesses, but according to the admissions of the pit boss. Consequently the same rule could not apply. The next case cited (Cully v. Northern P. R. Co. 35 Wash. 241, 77 Pac. 202) is equally inappropriate.

We cannot review all of appellant's cases within the appropriate limits of an ordinary opinion, but from an examination we think as a rule they fall as far short of sustaining appellant's contention as the case just above mentioned, in addition to the fact that many of them lay down rules on contributory negligence, master and servant, and the effects of promise to mend on the part of the master, which are opposed to the uniform holdings of this court. It must be borne in mind that there was no apparent danger here that was brought to the attention of the respondent. We are speaking now, of course, from the standpoint of the respondent's testimony. The condition of battery B was not discoverable from the place where the respondent was working, and the distinction must be borne in mind between an injury which occurs from a defect or a wrongful operation in the machinery or thing with which the servant is working, and an injury which is produced by contact with something which is disconnected from the work. Its condition could only be discovered by an examination, and it was not the respondent's duty to make such examination. Its dangerous condition had been disclosed to the pit boss by prior workmen, so that there seems to be no question of imminent or apparent danger in the case.

The appellant insists that testimony should not have been admitted tending to show the condition of the batteries, or the liability of the appellant for anything except the alleged negligence in allowing the walls to fall, and that there was nothing in the complaint upon which the testimony in regard to inspection could be based. But the duty of maintaining a safe place must necessarily carry with it the duty of making such inspection as is necessary to maintain the safe place. From the undisputed testimony, including the testimony of the pit boss, this case is brought within the announcement made by the court in Green v. Western American Co. 30 Wash. 87, 70 Pac. 310, viz.: "The general duty is also imposed upon the operator to see that the working places in the mine where props are necessary to keep the mine from caving in are propped; and that the working places are frequently inspected to ascertain whether the props are put up; and to see that the workmen put up the props as their work progresses. A failure to do this is negligence." It is true that was an action brought under the statute, but the announcement was of the general law. It is too well settled for discussion that the pit boss was not a fellow servant of respondent, but was a vice principal of the appellant. So far as establishing the negligence of the master is concerned, it may be admitted that he is not an insurer, and therefore does not warrant the safety of his employees or his plant; but he must use reasonable precaution, and his duty to guard against defects or want of repair is a continuing one. Under the testimony in this case, we think the jury was warranted in finding that the appellant was guilty of negligence. Conceding that battery B had been constructed by the servants, it is admitted that it had not been constructed by the respondent, which brings the case within the rule announced in Cheatham v. Hogan, 50 Wash. 465, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 951, 97 Pac. 499, where it was said: "When one servant of a master constructs a scaffold for a particular purpose of the master, uses it for that purpose, and then leaves it standing, and the master afterwards directs another servant who had no part in its construction, to use it for another purpose, the master adopts the scaffold as his own, and thereby guarantees that it is a safe place on which to work." While in this instance the battery was used for the same purpose, the principle of responsibility is not thereby changed.

The appellant urges error in the giving and refusing to give certain instructions. The instructions given and proffered are very lengthy, and we do not feel justified in setting them forth here. But from an examination of them we are not prepared to say that reversible error was committed. The instructions of the court stated the law correctly, and, while it is true that some of the instructions are in a sense contradictory, the contradictory instructions were asked for by appellant, and plainly should not have been given under the established facts of the case. But the appellant, having asked for erroneous instructions, cannot complain because they were contradictory.

Counsel for appellant earnestly insists that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury exactly how far the doctrine of safe place applied to coal mining cases, but this was requiring more of the court than the law requires of it. It is not practical for a court to enter into particulars in instructing a jury. Its duty is to announce general principles applicable to the issues, and the jury must apply them to the particular facts proven in the case. For instance, the court instructed the jury as follows: "In determining that degree of care which the defendant was required to use, you should determine it by the standard of ordinary care; that is, by that degree of care which a reasonably safe, careful, prudent, cautious, skilful, and competent coal mine operator would use to protect his employee from the dangers of the character which injured the plaintiff." This was a proper announcement of the law, and the test given was the test of ordinary care. The court could not proceed to tell the jury that a reasonably careful, prudent, etc., coal mining operator should inspect the coal mine every day or every two days, and tell it just what a sufficient inspection was. These are determinations to be made by the jury after applying the principles of the law given by the court to the facts proven. Considering the whole case, we are unable to determine that any prejudicial error was committed by the court in the trial of the cause.

The contention is also made that the verdict is excessive, the result of passion and prejudice. This is always a difficult proposition for the court to deal with, for so many elements enter into the attempted calculation which are not susceptible of calculation at all. When we go beyond an estimate of what would constitute a comfortable or reasonable provision for life for the injured or disabled person, and undertake to compensate for pain, embarrassment, or mental anguish of any kind, we enter the realms of conjecture and speculation; for what would embarrass a person of one temperament, or of one character of mental endowment, would not affect another who was either possessed of a different temperament or was philosophical enough to disregard it. That which would produce the keenest mental anguish in a sensitive nature would have but little effect on one of a coarser mold and of less refined nature. In spite of these difficulties, however, the doctrine is well established that these are elements of damage which may be taken into consideration. So that all that the court can do is to see that the jury approximates a sane and temperate estimation, taking into consideration the feelings of the ordinary person as we can best understand them. The respondent was twenty-four years old at the time of the accident. That he is a helpless cripple for life is probably established. At the time of the trial he was able to go about on crutches, both of his legs being paralyzed. But the doctors testified that there had been some slight improvement since the first shock, and, while they testified in substance that the chances of permanent improvement were very slight, there is still some hope under their testimony of considerable improvement. According to his own testimony, he labors under the embarrassment of having no control of his bowels or urinary organs. Whether this difficulty will be alleviated in any degree is problematical. Considering the testimony of the physicians and the tendency of nature to work cures, we think there is room for the indulgence of hope in this particular. According to the consensus of calculations made by standard mortuary tables, his expectancy was from the time of the accident about thirty-eight and one half years. The complaint limited the amount of his earnings to $150 per month. It is true he was earning about $7 a day when he was hurt, but this was under specially favorable circumstances so far as compensation was concerned. There is no reasonable probability that he could continue through life to find so remunerative an employment. Neither does the calculation take into consideration the probability that an ordinary man would not for so long a time be permitted by the ordinary vicissitudes of life, or even by his own inclination, to work every day in the month for so long a period. So that there must be a common-sense application of these tabulated calculations. Taking into consideration the amount of money expended by the respondent in attempting to effect a cure, and the presumably permanent condition in which we now find him, we think that an available interest on $22,000, after deducting his legitimate expenses, would under all the circumstances be a reasonable compensation; and we therefore reduce the verdict to that amount.

If the respondent remits the amount of $8,000 from the judgment within twenty days from the receipt of the remittitur in the trial court, the judgment will be affirmed; otherwise it will be reversed.

Rudkin, Ch. J., and Parker, Mount, and Crow, JJ., concur.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.
FRED R. BIRCH.

(89 Ark. 424, 117 S. W. 243.)

Servant — assumption of risk — knowledge.

A servant does not assume the risk of injury from the negligence of his master merely because he could have discovered and avoided it by the exercise of ordinary care; his assumption of such risk depending upon his actually being aware of and appreciating the danger.

(March 1, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hempstead County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James H. Stevenson, E. B. Kinsworthy, and Lewis Rhodon, for appellant:

It is the duty of a servant to inform himself of the risks incident to his employment, and he is held to a knowledge of those of which he has opportunity to know.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Marker, 41 Ark. 542; Southwestern Teleph. Co. v. Woughter, 56 Ark. 206, 19 S. W. 575; Fordyce v. Edwards, 65 Ark. 98, 44 S. W. 1034; Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Bethea, 57 Ark. 76, 20 S. W. 808; Little Rock M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 333, 3 Am. St. Rep. 230, 3 S. W. 50.

Messrs. J. D. Conway and William H. Arnold, for appellee:

The servant did not assume the risk.
Thomp. Neg. § 4614.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, F. R. Birch, while working for the defendant railway company as switchman in the company's yards at Hope, Arkansas, received personal injuries alleged to have been caused by negligent acts of defendant's servants, and he instituted the 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

present action to recover damages for said injuries. A jury awarded him damages in the sum of $1,500, and the defendant appealed.

The injury occurred in the following manner: The plaintiff was foreman of a switch engine, and was engaged in switching some box cars loaded with blocks of wood consigned to a heading mill at Hope. The door of one of these cars was standing open, and as plaintiff, after having set the coupling on one end of the car, ran along beside the car for the purpose of going to the other end to uncouple it from another car, some of the blocks of wood fell out of the car door, and one of them struck him, inflicting a serious injury. He testified that the switch engine bumped against the car with unusual force, Note. — Servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servant.

As is shown in a note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. ante, 1207, it is essential that a servant should know of the master's negligence in order that he may be held to have assumed the risk thereof, but it is a general rule that it is not necessary that the servant shall have been actually informed by the master of the negligent condition,—it is sufficient that he in some way acquires the knowledge. Nor is it, according to the great weight of authority, necessary that the servant should have actual knowledge,—constructive knowledge is sufficient. If a defect is so plain that a servant must know of it unless he shuts his eyes to his surroundings, he will be held to have assumed the risk the same as if the master had actually informed him of it.

As is said in Campbell v. Mullen, 60 Ill. App. 497, it is not so much knowledge as a means of knowledge that is important.

It is frequently said that a servant assumes all the "obvious" risks of the service, and again that he assumes all the risks of the service of which he knows or "ought to know." While all cases will probably agree that either statement is a correct statement of the rule, there is considerable difference of opinion as to what are obvious risks, and what risks the servant ought to know in addition to those which he actually does know.

In some cases, doubtless, the court has held that the servant assumed the risk of dangers, although they were unknown to him, and could not have been known to him even by the exercise of due care; but it will be found that in such cases the court was referring to the so-called assumed risks of the service, which remained after the master had done his full duty to the servant. (For the different senses in which this term is used, see note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. ante, 1207.)

Cases in which the defense of assumption

and caused the blocks to fall out of the car and strike him. Recovery is sought on the ground that it was necessary for the plaintiff to pass along beside the car in the discharge of his duties, and that the defendant was guilty of negligence in leaving the door of the loaded car standing open so that its contents could be jolted out. The testimony shows that the loaded car came into the yards of defendant over the Arkansas & Louisiana Railroad from Ozan, Arkansas. It was the duty of the plaintiff and his switch crew to move cars when directed by the yard clerk. There was a car inspector, whose duty it was to inspect cars, but there is evidence to the effect that it was not his duty to report the finding of open doors, but to report only defects in cars.

of risk exists, if at all, because of the servant's constructive knowledge, and not the actual knowledge, of the danger, are frequently complicated by the question whether his knowledge of the defect or of the danger was equivalent to an actual appreciation of the danger. This possible distinction between mere knowledge and appreciation is not within the scope of this note, but it should be borne in mind that many cases do make such a distinction, and hold that, in order to have the defense of assumption of risk available, it must appear not only that the servant knew of the defective conditions, but also that he fully appreciated the dangers arising therefrom.

The rule most frequently given is that a servant assumes the risk if the dangerous conditions are known, or would be known if he had exercised ordinary care. The same rule has been stated in various forms, as a servant does not assume the risk of dangers unknown to him or of which, by the exercise of ordinary care, he would not know. And again it is frequently stated that the servant does not assume the risk of a danger of which he has no knowledge, or which, as a reasonably prudent man, he is not bound to anticipate. But, on the other hand, these cases do not place upon the servant a duty to search for latent defects, or to make any investigation to discover whether the master has performed his duty. A large number of cases expressing the foregoing rules are gathered in a note to Burnside v. Peterson, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 76, and it is considered unnecessary to present other cases following this general rule.

It is undoubtedly true that the courts have, in a large number of cases, made the statement that a servant is chargeable with knowledge of defects which "might have been known to him by the use of due care," or some equivalent form of statement in a merely academic way,—the facts of the case not requiring the court to determine just the nature of the burden imposed thereby upon the servant. It is generally held that this formula does not require the servant to make any inspection to discover defects, and it is certainly very difficult to determine 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The court gave the following instruction at the request of plaintiff, which was objected to by defendant: "(1) In this case, if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the car from which the timber fell which struck the plaintiff was received by the defendant, and the doors of said car were open at the time said car was received and at the time the plaintiff undertook to remove the same; and that an ordinarily prudent person acting in the place of the railway company would have anticipated an injury to an employee like or similar to the one in this case; and if you further find that said injury was caused by a failure to keep the door closed, or to close the same before or at the time the car was removed,—then you may find for the plaintiff, if you just the particular duty which such a test does impose upon the servant, further than taking notice of the conditions which mere ordinary observation would bring to his notice.

For example, some courts, as will be shown hereafter, hold that a servant will be deemed to have constructive knowledge only of defects which are "plainly observable," and that no duty of exercising due care to acquire knowledge of such defects is imposed upon the servant. But it might be argued that the servant should use "due care" to notice defects which are plainly observable.

In some jurisdictions, however, the courts have expressly declared that it is not the duty of the servant to exercise even due care in learning of defects, but prescribe some other test which does not impose so great a duty.

Test in Federal court.

The doctrine of the Federal courts, as laid down by the United States Supreme Court, is that the servant assumes the risks of those dangers due to the master's negligence which are known to him or which are plainly observable by him, but that he is not obliged to use even ordinary care in ascertaining or discovering the defects. In other words, knowledge of the defects will not be presumed unless the defects were plainly observable.

Thus, in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 42 L. ed. 1188, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777, the court said: "Those [risks] not obvious, assumed by the employee, are such perils as exist after the master has used due care and precaution to guard the former against danger. And the defective condition of structures or appliances which, by the exercise of reasonable care of the master, may be obviated, and from the consequences of which he is relieved from responsibility to the servant by reason of the latter's knowledge of the situation, is such as is apparent to his observation."

And in Rockport Granite Co. v. Bjornholm, 53 C. C. A. 429, 115 Fed. 947, the court said that the doctrine of the Supreme further find that said plaintiff was acting with the care of an ordinarily prudent person at the time he undertook to have the engine coupled to said car for the purpose of removing it." The court also gave the following instruction, among others, at the request of the defendant: "(2) You are instructed that, where a person voluntarily enters the service of a railway company as a switchman, he assumes all the risks and hazards ordinary and incident to such employment, and he is presumed to have contracted with reference to such risks and hazards, and he not only assumes all risks and hazards ordinary and incident to such employment, but all risks and hazards which he could have known by the exercising of ordinary care and diligence; and if you find from the evidence that plaintiff so knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence could have known, of the condition of the car, how it was loaded, and whether the door was open or not, then the plaintiff is presumed to have contracted and assumed the risks and hazards incident to the duties as switchman in connection with said car and load of blocks." The contention of learned counsel is that the above-quoted instruction given at the instance of the plaintiff is erroneous, because it ignores the question of assumed risk. This instruction was predicated on the theory of negligence on the part of defendant in leaving the car door open so as to expose the switchman to danger. His right of recovery was made to depend entirely upon such negli-

Court was that it was not the duty of the servant to use ordinary care in ascertaining the condition of the employer's appliances, but there rested on him the peril only of defects known to him or plainly observable by him.

So, in Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, it was held that an employee assumes the risk of injury from defective appliances furnished by his employer only when the defect is known to or plainly observable by the employee.

And this rule of the Federal court has been followed in numerous cases. Davidson v. Southern P. Co. 44 Fed. 476; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. O'Leary, 35 C. C. A. 562, 93 Fed. 737; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Murray, 42 C. C. A. 334, 102 Fed. 264; Lindsay v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 50 C. C. A. 298, 112 Fed. 384; Kenney v. Meddaugh, 55 C. C. A. 115, 118 Fed. 209; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Swearingen, 59 C. C. A. 31, 122 Fed. 193, affirmed in 196 U. S. 51, 49 L. ed. 382, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Riley, 76 C. C. A. 107, 145 Fed. 137, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 327; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit, 87 C. C. A. 401, 160 Fed. 440; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Donovan, 87 C. C. A. 600, 160 Fed. 826; Federal Lead Co. v. Swyers, 88 C. C. A. 547, 161 Fed. 687; Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Williams, 97 C. C. A. 597, 173 Fed. 337.

A charge upon the subject of the knowledge by a fireman of the absence of brakes on the engine on which he had ridden 50 or 60 miles is not erroneous where it amounts solely to a direction to the jury that the man was bound to use his eyes, and if, by their use, he could see the defect, he was bound thereby, even though he had not observed it; but that he was not bound to make a careful examination of every part of an engine upon which he was fireman, in order to charge the railway company with negligence, or exonerate himself from the charge of contributory negligence. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Holloway, 191 U. S. 334, 48 L. ed. 207, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102.

In National Steel Co. v. Hore, 83 C. C. A. 578, 155 Fed. 62, the court said that the 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

defect which the servant sees, or should see if ordinarily observant, may present dangers so obvious that the law will conclusively presume that he did know the danger.

Unusual and extraordinary risks which are not incident to the service can be said to have been assumed by the employee only when it is shown that he had full knowledge of their existence, or ought reasonably in the exercise of ordinary prudence and intelligence to have had such knowledge. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Jones, 59 C. C. A. 87, 123 Fed. 753.

Test in Arkansas.

The earlier Arkansas cases apparently do not go as far as does the court in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch.

Thus, in Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 333, 3 Am. St. Rep. 230, 3 S. W. 50, the court said: "The fact that he might have known of defects, or that he had the means and opportunity of knowing of them, will not preclude him from a recovery unless he did in fact know of them, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known of them. He is not bound to make an examination to find defects."

This statement is quoted with approval in Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Thompson, 82 Ark. 11, 100 S. W. 83, and, in Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Voss (Ark.) 18 S. W. 172, the Leverett Case is also cited with approval; but it is to be noted that in the quotation given the court apparently confuses the general rule with the rule as stated in the BIRCH CASE.

And in Fordyce v. Edwards, 60 Ark. 438, 30 S. W. 758, second appeal, 65 Ark. 98, 44 S. W. 1034, the court said that a servant could not blindly go ahead regardless of consequences, but that it was his duty to make such an inspection as ordinary care would require of one whose duty it is to take notice of obvious defects.

Test in Minnesota.

The test of "ordinary observation" has been adopted by the Minnesota courts.

gence on the part of the defendant, and the exercise of due care on his own part. He did not assume the risk of danger created by the negligent act of the employer, unless he was aware of the danger and appreciated it. The fact that he could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered and avoided the danger, did not constitute an assumption of the risk where it arose by reason of negligence of the master, though he might have been guilty of contributory negligence which would have prevented a recovery. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 837, 92 S. W. 244, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 430. In this respect the instruction given at the instance of the defendant was too favorable to it, for the jury were therein told, in effect, that,

Thus, in Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 107 Minn. 260, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 138, 120 N. W. 360, the court lays down the following rules: "The test of 'knowledge of danger' is not the exercise of ordinary care to discover danger, but whether the danger was known to or plainly observable by the employee. The test of 'appreciation of risk' is whether the servant understood the risk, or, by the exercise of ordinary observation, ought to have understood it." The court went on to say that to hold that the servant assumes the risks which he knew, or ought to know from the exercise of the care of the ordinarily prudent man, would break down all distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence, and assumption of risk would become a question of care. While the servant is bound to use his eyes and to see what is open and apparent to anyone using his eyes, he is not required to look for danger. It was the master's duty both to observe and inspect, the servant's merely to observe.

And in Hendrickson v. Ash, 99 Minn. 417, 109 N. W. 830, the court said: "Although many courts hold to the contrary, it has always been the rule in this state that it is not enough that the servant knew, or ought to have known, the actual character and condition of the defective instrumentality furnished for his use. He must also have understood, or by the exercise of ordinary observation ought to have understood, the risks to which he was exposed by their use."

A servant assumes the risk of injuries from dangers which he, by the use of his senses, ought to have known. Sherman v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 34 Minn. 259, 25 N. W. 593.

Test in Texas.

In Texas the rule is that a servant is chargeable with knowledge of such defects only as are known to him or open to observation (Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lehmborg, 75 Tex. 61, 12 S. W. 838; Pippin v. Sherman, S. & S. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 58 S. W. 961; Ramm v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

notwithstanding the negligence of the defendant, if the plaintiff "knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence could have known, of the condition of the car, how it was loaded, and whether the door was open or not," then he is deemed to have assumed the risk of the danger. This is not correct, as already stated.

Now, there is no testimony tending to establish the fact that the plaintiff knew that the door was open when he attempted to run past the car to uncouple it. He testified that he did not know it, and that is the only testimony on the subject. There is evidence sufficient to have warranted the jury in finding that he could have ascertained, by the exercise of ordinary care, that the car door was open, and that it was dangerous

Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 426); or those risks of which in the ordinary discharge of his duty he must have acquired the knowledge (Peck v. Peck, 99 Tex. 10, 87 S. W. 248; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hannig, 91 Tex. 350, 43 S. W. 508; Bookrum v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 57 S. W. 919; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Shaughnessy [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1026; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Stoy, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 448, 99 S. W. 135; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Bonn, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 99 S. W. 413; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Udalle [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 330); and the servant is not bound to exercise due care to know of a defect (Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Taylor, 79 Tex. 104, 23 Am. St. Rep. 316, 14 S. W. 918; Price v. Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. 41 Tex. Civ. App. 47, 90 S. W. 717); for it is not the servant's duty to inspect the appliances given him by the master (Jones v. Shaw, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 290, 41 S. W. 690; St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. Schuler, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 356, 102 S. W. 783); so a servant is not required to exercise even ordinary care to discover defects even patent in the appliances furnished by the master (Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Davis, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 285, 80 S. W. 253).

A servant assumes the risk of injuries if he knows of them, or must have necessarily learned of them in the course of the work. Missouri Valley Bridge & Iron Co. v. Ballard (Tex. Civ. App.) 116 S. W. 93. And to the same effect was the decision in Bonn v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 82 S. W. 808.

And in Horton v. Ft. Worth Packing & Provision Co. 33 Tex. Civ. App. 150, 76 S. W. 211, the court said: "The law of assumed risk does not impose on the servant the duty of discovering or trying to discover that the master has failed to perform the duty he owes the servant, but treats as risks of the employment, outside of the ordinary hazards, only those that arise from dangers of which the servant has actual knowledge, or which are obvious, so that knowledge thereof will be imputed to him."

And in Quinn v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R.

to pass along close to it. This would have been contributory negligence, but it could not have constituted an assumption of a risk which arose by reason of the master's negligence, except in the sense that a person assumes the risk of his own negligence. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. v. Bubliss, 83 Ark. 567, 104 S. W. 210; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Mangan, 86 Ark. 507, 112 S. W.

168; Narramore v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 48 L.R.A. 68, 37 C. C. A. 499, 96 Fed. 298.

Other instructions requested by the defendant and refused were fully covered by those given, and no prejudicial error is found.

Judgment affirmed.

Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 84 S. W. 395, the court said: "We think it is one of the principles of law that is now well established in this state that the assumption of risk exists only in connection with a risk or danger known to the servant, or (what is the same thing in legal contemplation) one which the circumstances necessarily charge him with knowledge of."

The rule is stated somewhat more broadly in a few cases.

Thus, in Robinson v. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. 99 Tex. 110, 87 S. W. 667, it was held that the servant assumed the risks of which he had actual knowledge, or of such as he would necessarily have acquired knowledge by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety.

And in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hynson, 101 Tex. 543, 109 S. W. 929, the court said: "He assumes the risks of a danger of which he has actual knowledge, and of such hazards as he would have learned by the exercise of that ordinary circumspection which a prudent man would have used in the particular employment." Similar language was used or approved in Bonnet v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 89 Tex. 76, 33 S. W. 334; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 111 S. W. 106.

So, in Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Davidson, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 85, 107 S. W. 949, it was held that the trial court did not err in charging the jury to the effect that the servant, in addition to the ordinary risks of the service, assumed "such others as he must necessarily have known of in the ordinary discharge of the duties of his service," and in failing to charge that the servant assumed such risks as he, "by the use of ordinary care and caution, could have known."

Miscellaneous tests.

And in a number of other decisions the test has been stated in such a form as to convey the idea that the servant is not obliged to exercise due care in any way to acquire knowledge of the master's negligence; but, of course, the occasional use by the court of language different from that generally used cannot be taken as an indication that the court means to adopt a different rule. Language appropriate in one case might be erroneous as applied to the facts and circumstances of another.

The test, as applied in Alton Paving, Bldg. & Fire Brick Co. v. Hudson, 176 Ill. 270, 52 N. E. 256, is whether, in the "exercise of his faculties," the servant ought to have known of the danger.
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Where a defect cannot be "readily detected" by a servant, and it is no part of his duty to inspect the appliance, he is not chargeable with notice thereof. Austin v. Appling, 88 Ga. 54, 13 S. E. 955.

A servant does not assume risks of danger which would not appear from an "ordinary inspection." Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136.

And in Wallace v. Bach, 36 Ky. L. Rep. 69, 97 S. W. 418, the court said: "He is under no obligation or duty to critically, or at all, examine the premises to see and guard against occult dangers. If, however, the danger is so obvious or patent that the employee could not but know of it, except by closing his eyes and refusing to see that which was visible to a cursory observation, then, if he is injured, he cannot hold his employer liable."

Where the defense relied on is the assumption by the servant of the risk to which he was subjected, it must appear, with reasonable certainty, either that he was specifically informed of such risk, or that it was so obvious as that it could not have escaped his attention, due regard being had for his intelligence and opportunities. Johnson v. Christie, 117 La. 911, 42 So. 421.

The law is settled in Pennsylvania that an employee in accepting the employment assumes all risks ordinarily incidental thereto, and "all other risks open and obvious, the dangerous character of which he has had an opportunity to observe." Bowen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 219 Pa. 405, 68 Atl. 963.

In Whipple v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 19 R. I. 587, 61 Am. St. Rep. 796, 35 Atl. 305, and in Crandall v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 19 R. I. 594, 35 Atl. 307, it is stated that a servant assumes all the risks arising from the nonperformance of the master's duty, of which he has knowledge, or of which he has competent means of knowledge. And in the Whipple Case it is also stated that the servant assumes all the risks which may be ascertained by reasonable observation. Of course, the expression "competent means of knowledge" is very indefinite, but the other language used materially limits it.

The servant is only required to see and comprehend those imperfections which are "so significant as ordinarily to attract the attention of a person" under the same or similar circumstances in the exercise of ordinary care. Laughy v. Bird & W. Lumber Co. 136 Wis. 301, 117 N. W. 796.

In Bryce v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 103 Iowa, 665, 72 N. W. 780, the court says that what a man ought, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, to know, he does know. And this was quoted with approval in Olson v. Hanford Produce Co. 118 Iowa, 55, 91 N. W. 806. But in the Bryce Case the phrase "reasonable diligence" is used interchangeably with reasonable observation, while in the Olson Case it is used as the equivalent of ordinary care, and it is probable that the court intended to follow the general rule.

In Muldorney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 462, the court said that it was the servant's knowledge, and not his means of knowledge, which affected his right to recover; this rule, however, is not in accord with that adopted by the later Iowa cases.

W. M. G.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

D. P. SMITH

v.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(82 Kan. 136, 107 Pac. 635.)

Servant — railway engineer — reliance on care of master.

1. A railway engineer is not bound to know every defect existing in the ties and rails of the track over which he runs his engine. If the track, ties, and rails are in place, he has the right to assume that the company has discharged its obligation to keep them in reasonably safe repair.

Same — defective ties and rails — assumption of risk.

2. In an action by a railway engineer against the company to recover for personal injuries received in the derailment of his engine caused by defective ties and rails, where the defects had existed for such a length of time that the railway company was bound to have notice of them, and where it was shown that the engineer had no knowledge of the defects and no opportunity of knowing of their existence, except such as came to him in operating his engine over the track, held that the risk as to the condition of the roadbed was not one which he assumed.

Same — injury — notice — waiver.

3. In the action mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the answer set up as a defense the failure of the plaintiff to give notice in writing of his claim for injuries within thirty days, as provided in the contract of employment. At the trial the plaintiff without objection testified that someone from the claim department of the company came to his house three weeks after the accident, and took from him a written statement concerning the accident and his injuries. The defendant then introduced in evidence the written statement itself, signed by the plaintiff, stating the time, place, manner, and cause of his being injured, and the nature and extent of his injuries. Held that the taking of the written instrument constituted a waiver by the company of the failure to give the notice.

(Porter, J., dissents in part.)

(March 12, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Brown County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. A. Low and Paul E. Walker, for appellant:

It will be presumed that the accident was due to one of the risks assumed by the plaintiff in the course of his employ-

Note. — Assumption by train employee of risks due to defects in tracks or roadbed.

Upon the question, May a servant assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, see note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. ante, 1207.

As to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servant, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, ante, 1250.

This note is confined to cases involving injury to train men, such as conductors, engineers, firemen, and brakemen, whose duties are confined to the actual running of the train only, and does not include injuries to brakemen or other employees engaged in making up trains or coupling cars, etc., and whose opportunity of acquiring knowledge of the condition of the track is different and greater than that of one engaged solely in the actual operation of the train.

And this note is also confined to defects in the tracks or roadbed, and does not include injuries due to structures erected near or over the tracks, as in such cases the opportunity of acquiring knowledge of the defects would, of course, be much greater than of defects in the track or roadbed.

In regard to the distinction between a train man's duty in respect to defective tracks and roadbed, and in respect to other defects connected therewith, the court in Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Shea, 142 Ala. 19, 37 So. 796, said: "Train men do not assume the risks of defective track conditions. They have a right to assume that the track is safe. It is not their duty, but the duty of other employees, to keep it in proper condition. The acquaintance which train men are required to have with the premises, and to acquire which they are carried over the road on trains before being put in charge of trains, is more an acquaintance with the line, so to say, than with the track. They must know, and, in the way indicated, they are taught, the conditions of the line in the respect of stations, stopping places, switches, ment, or to accident, until the contrary is shown by positive and satisfactory evidence.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 67 C. C. A. 421, 132 Fed. 593; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wagner, 33 Kan. 600, 7 Pac. 204; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ledbetter, 34 Kan. 326, 8 Pac. 411; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tindall, 57 Kan. 719, 48 Pac. 12; Lane v. Missouri P. R. Co. 64 Kan. 755, 68 Pac. 626; Wood, Mast. & S. § 382; 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 883.

The plaintiff assumed the risk of accident from the condition of the track.

Walker v. Scott, 67 Kan. 814, 64 Pac. 615; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Loosley, 76 Kan. 103, 90 Pac. 990; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Click, 78 Kan. 419, 96 Pac. 796.

Messrs. Joseph G. Waters, John C.

sidings, grades, curves, and distances. With these things they have to do; but not with the track itself in respect of its condition and maintenance."

The general rule asserted by practically all of the cases cited below, and not repudiated by any, is that a train man has a right to assume that the track and roadbed are safe, that it is not his duty to make an investigation in order to discover defects, and, in the absence of any knowledge, actual or constructive, of the defects, he will not be held to have assumed the risks thereof. But this is also the general rule as to assumption of risk in all cases of master and servant, as is shown in a note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. ante, 1207. The distinctive feature in respect to the assumption of risk by train men of defects in the track or roadbed is the question whether there is anything in the occupation of a train man from which may be inferred knowledge of the dangerous condition of the track or roadbed. In other words, whether knowledge of the defective condition may be imputed to the train man merely because of the fact that he has had occasion to run over the track a greater or less number of times.

A train man does not assume the risk of defective tracks or roadbed merely because of his contract of employment. Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 1 C. C. A. 354, 4 U. S. App. 221, 49 Fed. 538, affirmed in 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618; Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 333, 3 Am. St. Rep. 230, 3 S. W. 50; Smith v. Erie R. Co. 67 N. J. L. 636, 59 L.R.A. 302, 52 Atl. 634.

The risk of injury from a defect in a track negligently permitted to remain unrepaired is not one of the risks of the service assumed by a conductor. Osterhout v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. 73 N. J. L. 42, 62 Atl. 190.

And a knowledge of defects in a roadbed is not inferable from the mere fact that the servant had been accustomed to run trains over it. Georgia P. R. Co. v. Davis, 92 Ala. 300, 25 Am. St. Rep. 47, 9 So. 252; Jackson Lumber Co. v. Cunningham, 141 Ala. 206, 37 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Waters, and John F. Kerrigan, for appellee:

In the absence of previous knowledge of the defective condition, the plaintiff had the right to assume that no such dangerous condition existed.

Brown v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 31 Kan. 15, 1 Pac. 605.

Porter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the evening of June 7, 1907, D. P. Smith, an engineer in the employ of the defendant, was running an engine pulling a freight train from Horton to Topeka. When about 5 miles from Horton, at the foot of a long, steep grade, and at a tangent of a curve, the engine was derailed, and the

So. 445; Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Shea, supra; Madden v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 303, 20 N. W. 317; Walker v. McNeill, 17 Wash. 582, 50 Pac. 518.

Where there is no evidence that the engineer had any knowledge of the defects existing in the roadbed, except the fact that he had been over the road a few times with freight trains, it was held, in Walker v. McNeill, supra, that there was no evidence sufficient to warrant an instruction upon the defense of assumption of risk.

A brakeman cannot be held chargeable with knowledge of defects in a track or in structures near the track, where he had been but two months upon the road, and had always passed the station where he was injured in the nighttime. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Welch, 52 Ill. 183, 4 Am. Rep. 593.

A motorman does not assume the risk of his car slipping on wet grass growing upon the tracks, where his only knowledge of the danger was such as could be acquired by passing over the track without stopping, several times a day for three months. Mann v. Illinois Central Traction Co. 236 Ill. 30, 86 N. E. 161.

Before it can be said that an engineer assumed the risk of a defective roadbed, it must be made to appear that he was warned of the danger, or that it was patent and open. Western R. Co. v. Russell, 144 Ala. 142, 113 Am. St. Rep. 24, 39 So. 311.

But, in Dunbar v. Central Vermont R. Co. 79 Vt. 474, 65 Atl. 528, where there was nothing in the case to show whether the plaintiff knew the condition of the road or not, save what might be inferred from the fact that he had recently run his train over it several times without accident, it was held error for the court to take no note of that fact as a ground for inference either way, and to assume that the servant did not know of the defect, and to submit the case accordingly, thereby casting the burden upon the defendant of showing assumption of risk.

And other courts have stated that a court cannot, as a matter of law, say that a train man knows of defective conditions of the track or roadbed where his only knowlplaintiff received injuries to recover damages for which he brought this action. The jury returned a verdict in his favor for $2,000, and the defendant appeals.

The engine which the plaintiff was running belonged to the 1,600 type or class, very large and heavy. The track where the accident occurred had been constructed for twenty years and was of 60-pound rails, somewhat worn. On account of the lightness of the rails, a rule of the company limited the speed of engines of this type to 15 miles an hour. The petition alleged that the derailment was caused by defective ties and rails. Among other defenses, the answer set up that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in running his engine at a high rate of speed, in excess of edge thereof was such as would be acquired by riding over the track in the performance of his duty. Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Miller, 140 Ind. 685, 40 N. E. 116; Fluhrer v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 121 Mich. 212, 80 N. W. 23; Hamilton v. Michigan C. R. Co. 135 Mich. 95, 97 N. W. 392; Mehan v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Corp. 73 N. Y. 585.

15 miles an hour. The plaintiff testified that he was familiar with the rule limiting the speed, and was running 15 miles an hour. The witnesses for the defendant placed various estimates on the speed of the train from 20 to 40 miles an hour. The derailment and overturning of the engine, and the fact that twenty of the freight cars were piled in confusion on the right of way, tended strongly to discredit the engineer's testimony, but we cannot say as a matter of law that it was physically impossible for this to have resulted with the train running at a speed of 15 miles. The speed of the train was under all the evidence a question for the jury, and as to this fact their verdict must stand. The jury made a special finding that the neg-

A conductor whose trains pass rapidly from station to station, and whose duties are in the operation of the train, and not in track construction, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to have a reasonable opportunity of seeing that ties are broken or decayed, or that ballast has not been sufficiently placed or may have become displaced. Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Miller, supra.

There is no burden resting upon a train employee of investigation or inquiry in regard to defects in tracks or roadbed. Georgia P. R. Co. v. Davis and Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Shea, supra; Western R. Co. v. Russell, 144 Ala. 143, 113 Am. St. Rep. 24, 39 So. 311; Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, supra; Dolan v. Sierra R. Co. 135 Cal. 435, 67 Pac. 686; Dale v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 63 Mo. 459; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 603, 68 S. W. 559; Dunbar v. Central Vermont R. Co. supra.

In Western R. Co. v. Russell, 144 Ala. 142, 113 Am. St. Rep. 24, 39 So. 311, an engineer who had been warned that there had been a heavy rainfall along his route, and had been cautioned to look out for high water at waterways, was injured by running into a washout. In regard to the engineer's assumption of the risk of such danger after the notification, the court said: "It was not the duty of the engineer on any such general notice, to do more in the way of examination of the roadways or waterways than could be done consistently with the performance of his own duties as engineer."

A train hand is not required by law to examine a trestle to ascertain whether it is defective. Dolan v. Sierra R. Co. supra.

A conductor, in the absence of actual knowledge of a defect in a track, will not be deemed to have assumed the risks thereof, as it was not part of his duty to pay particular attention thereto. North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dudgeon, 184 Ill. 477, 56 N. E. 706.

And in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Swett, 45 Ill. 197, 92 Am. Dec. 206, the court said: "The peril consisted in the defective construction of the road and its appurtenances, its culverts and bridges, which the fireman could know nothing about, and which he could not have discovered by the exercise of ordinary precaution and prudence; indeed, he was not required to know anything about that; the implied undertaking of his employers, that the road and culverts and bridges were properly constructed and safe for the passage of trains, was sufficient for him."

And in other cases it has been held generally that if a train man does not know of defects in the track or roadbed, he does not assume them. Clapp v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 36 Minn. 6, 1 Am. St. Rep. 629, 29 N. W. 340; Wilkie v. Raleigh & C. F. R. Co. 127 N. C. 203, 37 S. E. 204; Texas & P. R. Co. v. McClane, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 321, 62 S. W. 565; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick (Tex. Civ. App.) 91 S. W. 355.

A train man does not assume the risk of defects in a roadbed where he has not been warned thereof, and as a matter of fact does not know of them. Georgia P. R. Co. v. Davis, supra.

And in Smith v. Erie R. Co. 67 N. J. L. 636, 59 L.R.A. 302, 52 Atl. 634, it was held that the risk of injury from a defect in a railroad track or roadbed negligently permitted to remain in bad repair is not among the ordinary and natural risks that are assumed by a train man, and is not assumed unless it becomes known to him, or is so obvious that, by the exercise of ordinary care on his part, it would be observed.

An engineer, in the absence of actual knowledge of the defect, does not assume the risk of injuries due to a defective rail. Clapp v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. supra.

However, if a servant has full knowledge of the defects, but nevertheless continues ligence of the defendant consisted in having defective ties and rails. Some of the defendant's own witnesses testified that the inside ball of the rail was worn, and that a rail in that condition on a curve is unsafe. Witnesses for the plaintiff testified that there were at least six rotten and defective ties at the place where the derailment occurred. There was therefore some evidence to sustain a finding of the jury to the effect that the derailment was caused by defective ties and rails, and that these defects had existed for such a length of time that the defendant was bound to have notice of them. If the jury believed the plaintiff's testimony that he did not know the condition of the ties and rails, it disposes of the defense of assumed risk.

in the employment without complaint, he will be deemed to have assumed the risks thereof. Moss v. Johnson, 22 Ill. 633; McCauley v. Springfield Street R. Co. 169 Mass. 301, 47 N. E. 1006; Paris, M. & S. P. R. Co. v. Stokes (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 484; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, supra.

Where a servant had been a baggage man and a brakeman for six years, and had been on defendant's road for three months, and had worked on a gravel train ballasting the track, and during that employment had often been on and about a side track, it was held, in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Aisdurf, 47 Ill. App. 200, that he was clearly chargeable with the manner in which the side track was ballasted.

In Missouri, where the weight of authority is to the effect that a servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence, it has been held in a number of cases that, if the company fails in its duty in respect to furnishing a reasonably safe track or roadbed, it is responsible for injuries resulting therefrom to the train man. Porter v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 160; Dale v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. supra; Devlin v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 87 Mo. 545.

And in Devlin v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. supra, the court said: "It does not follow, because the rails were old, light, and well worn in places, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, that he was bound to pursue the inquiry and determine for himself and at his own peril whether the road was or was not fit for use." The court goes on to say, however, that the servant's conduct in this matter bore on the question of contributory negligence, and not on assumption of risk.

In Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Price, 38 C. C. A. 239, 97 Fed. 423, the court said: "The rule is that the danger from the defects of the railroad or machinery furnished the employee must have been so obvious and threatening that a reasonably prudent man in his situation would have avoided them, in order to charge the injured servant with contributory negligence because he continued in the discharge of his duty, and thereby assumed the risks."

This statement in fact eliminates the de-
23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Michaels, 57 Kan. 474, 46 Pac. 938; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bancord, 66 Kan. 81, 71 Pac. 253; Brinkmeier v. Missouri P. R. Co. 69 Kan. 738, 77 Pac. 586. There are doubtless cases the extreme logic of which would seem to justify holding that an engineer has equal opportunities with the railway company to know every defect existing in the ties and rails in the track over which he runs his engine, but in our judgment so to hold is contrary to the weight of reason. The more recent tendency of the courts is against any extension of the doctrine of assumed risk. The present case is obviously different from one where an employee constantly engaged in work in and about a railroad yard is injured by a defect in the fense of assumption of risk, but the court does not make it clear whether this statement was intended as a general rule applicable in all cases of master and servant, or was to be applied only to a case of a train man and his assumption of risks of defects in a roadbed. If the statement was intended as a general rule, it is clearly against the weight of authority.

Although a brakeman may know that a track is defective and assume the risk thereof, he does not thereby necessarily assume the increased risk created by the running of his train at a dangerous rate of speed over such defective track. Lawhorn v. Millen & S. R. Co. 97 Ga. 742, 25 S. E. 492.

The question whether or not a railroad track is in such bad condition that no person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would have incurred the risk of using it is for the jury, where the evidence is not such as to leave no room for two opinions. Morgan v. Rainier Beach Lumber Co. 51 Wash. 335, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 472, 98 Pac. 1120.

In McCabe & S. Constr. Co. v. Wilson, 17 Okla. 355, 87 Pac. 320, the plaintiff, an engineer, knew that the bridge which gave way and injured him was defective, but he had been assured by the superintendent of the defendant's construction gang that the bridge was safe, and had been directed to proceed with his engine upon the bridge. The court held that the engineer did not assume the risk of the injury in question, but does not expressly put it upon the ground that he was acting under the immediate directions of a superior, and in accordance with assurances of safety by a servant charged with the duty of inspection.

In some cases the broad statement is made that a train man does not assume the risk arising from defective tracks or roadbed. Knapp v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa 41, 32 N. W. 18; Trask v. California Southern R. Co. 63 Cal. 96. In connection with these cases, it should be noted that the court was probably dealing with a case in which the train man was not aware of the defects, and consequently the broad statement was true as applied to the facts of the particular case.

W. M. G.

tracks, the condition of which he is required to know. Thus, in Clark v. Missouri P. R. Co. 48 Kan. 654, 29 Pac. 1138, a brakeman was held to have assumed the risk as to the condition of the roadbed, where he had equal knowledge with the master of the defects which caused his injury. To the same effect is Missouri P. R. Co. v. Click, 78 Kan. 419, 96 Pac. 796. On the other hand, in St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Irwin, 37 Kan. 701, 1 Am. St. Rep. 266, 16 Pac. 146, it was held that the conductor of a train is not required to know all the defects and obstructions that may exist on the road over which he runs. What reason can be suggested why the same rule should not apply to an engineer? It is true that the duties of a conductor require him to remain on the inside of the train, while the duties of an engineer oblige him to keep his eyes on the track; but the engineer's lookout is always ahead to see if the track is clear, and he is not required to examine the condition of the ties and rails. It is sufficient for him to know that they are in place, and, if they are, he has the right to assume that the company has discharged its obligation to keep them in reasonably safe repair.

When the plaintiff entered the employ of the railway company, he executed a written agreement which provided that, if he sustained any personal injury while in the service of the company for which he might make claim for damages, he would within thirty days thereafter give notice in writing to the general or claims attorney, stating the time, place, manner, cause, and extent of his injuries, and his claim therefor, and that his failure to give such notice should constitute a bar to any suit on account of such injuries. The contract of employment was introduced in evidence by the defendant, and there was no showing by the plaintiff that he gave any notice of the injury. At the close of the evidence, the defendant requested the court to instruct the jury that if they found from the evidence that the plaintiff voluntarily signed the contract, and did not give the notice provided therein, and that the railway company had not waived the giving of such notice, their verdict should be for the defendant. The court refused to give this instruction, but gave one in which the jury were told that the contract was not binding on the plaintiff, and the fact that he did not comply with the agreement and give such notice constituted no defense to the action. In our view, this raises the only question in the case. Conceding that the provision requiring notice of the claim was 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a reasonable and lawful one, that plaintiff was bound thereby, and that the instruction given by the court was erroneous, the error must be regarded as wholly immaterial, for the reason that on the trial the defendant introduced evidence showing a waiver by the company of this provision of the contract. Plaintiff himself testified without objection that someone from the claim department of the company came to his house three weeks after the injury, and took from him a written statement about the wreck. The defendant then introduced in evidence the written statement itself, which states the time, place, manner, and cause of his being injured, and the nature and extent of his injuries. It is signed by the plaintiff. The only detail in which it fails to comply with the provisions of the contract as to notice is in not stating the amount of his claim for injuries; but manifestly this omission would not be sufficient to deprive him of his right to maintain the action. Being in the nature of a forfeiture, the provision must be strictly construed. A similar provision in the contract was involved in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Walker, 79 Kan. 31, 99 Pac. 209. The question there arose upon the pleadings, but it was held that the provision may be waived, that no consideration is necessary to support a waiver, and that it is not necessary to show facts amounting to technical estoppel in order to constitute waiver of such a provision. Whether the written statement which the defendant obtained from the plaintiff be regarded as a sufficient compliance with the condition requiring notice to be given, or the action of the defendant in taking the statement be considered as a sufficient excuse for the failure of the plaintiff to give the notice, is not important. It is well established that the courts will not enforce a forfeiture where the conduct of the other party is sufficient upon which to base a reasonable excuse for the default. Hartford Life Annuity Ins. Co. v. Unsell, 144 U. S. 439, 36 L. ed. 496, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671. At the top of the statement made to the claim agent there is this pencil memorandum: "Horton, July 24-07,"—indicating that the statement was made on that date, which was more than thirty days from the date the injuries were received. The plaintiff, however, testified that he made and that the agent took the statement within three weeks after the accident. The majority of the court is of the opinion that, since the defendant offered no evidence to the contrary further than what appeared by the memorandum referred to, there was no question of fact in regard to waiver that should have been submitted to the jury.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Johnston, Ch. J., and Burch, Mason, Smith, Graves, and Benson, JJ., concur.

Porter, J., dissenting:

I think the instruction requested should have been given, and that it was error for the court to withdraw from the consideration of the jury the contract of employment on the ground that it was not binding on the plaintiff. If the written statement was in fact taken by the claim agent after the expiration of thirty days from the time of the accident there was, of course, no waiver, and the question whether there was such a waiver should have been submitted to the jury. With these exceptions I concur in all that is said in the opinion.

Petition for rehearing denied.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

RHODA BROWN, Admr., etc., of C. F. Brown, Deceased,
v.
WEST RIVERSIDE COAL COMPANY,
Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 120 N. W. 732.)

Trial — negligence — jury.

1. The question of a master's negligence in storing powder, dynamite, and dynamite caps in dangerous quantities in the room provided for the storing of workmen's tools, clothing, and lunches, and which is used by them for refuge from storms, is for the jury.

Master — explosives — injury — evidence.

2. The negligence of a master in storing dynamite in dangerous quantities in a room provided for the use of workmen is not negatived by the fact that an explosion is an unusual and extraordinary occurrence.

Trial — evidence — inference.

3. The absence of direct evidence as to the cause of the death of an employee whose body was found near a building in which dynamite had been stored will not prevent a finding by the jury that it was caused by an explosion of dynamite by a lightning stroke, if known facts point to that inference.

Master — explosives — lightning.

4. A master who negligently stores high explosives in a room provided for the use of workmen in storing tools and clothing and seeking shelter from storms cannot escape liability for the death of a workman 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) killed by an explosion, by the fact that it was caused by lightning.

Action — death — proof.

5. To maintain an action for the death of an employee through the explosion of dynamite negligently stored in a room provided for his use, plaintiff is not bound to demonstrate the manner in which the explosives were ignited.

Proximate cause — negligence — accident.

6. A master's negligence in storing dynamite in a place where its accidental ignition will endanger the lives of his employees is the proximate cause of the death of a servant through its explosion, notwithstanding the cause of the explosion is purely accidental or wholly unknown.

Evidence — presumption — care.

7. The presumption of care on the part of one killed through the alleged negligence of another, where there is no witness of the accident, is sufficient to take to the jury the question of the absence of contributory

Note. — Liability of master for injuries due to the explosion of dynamite by lightning.

The unusual question of the liability of the master engaged in blasting in quarries and mines, for injuries resulting from an explosion of the dynamite by lightning, was passed upon in Baccelli v. North River Stone Co. 133 App. Div. 449, 18 N. Y. Supp. 29, where it was held that a master was not bound to anticipate that, in the use of electric exploders, there was a substantial danger in a thunderstorm, when it did not appear that any precaution was in any way prescribed in the regulations of the commissioner of labor, nor that any precaution was deemed necessary in any other quarry or mine where such exploders were in use.

An employee who, knowing and appreciating the risk, voluntarily places himself in a position of danger with respect to a dynamite magazine located on the premises of his employer, was held in Davis v. Somers-Cambridge Co. 75 Ohio St. 215, 79 N. E. 233, not to be entitled to recover for personal injuries occasioned by the accidental explosion of such magazine without fault on the part of the employer, although such employee may not have known and realized all the possible consequences of the danger. The dynamite in this case exploded during a thunderstorm, but whether the explosion was due to a bolt of lightning or to some other accidental cause was unknown.

Upon the question, May a servant assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, see note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. ante, 1207.

As to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servant, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, ante, 1250. W. M. G.

negligence on his part, in the absence of clear and unmistakable proof to the contrary.

Trial — jury — assumption of risk.

8. The question of the assumption of risk on the part of an employee whose duties require him to be near stored dynamite is for the jury, where he was inexperienced, and not shown to have appreciated the gravity of his peril.

Master — negligence — evidence.

9. A master may be found to be negligent in using a single room of a small shanty for the convenience and shelter of workmen, for the storage of dynamite, and for the installation of a telephone, the electricity from the wires of which may cause an explosion of the dynamite.

(April 8, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Parker, Hewitt, and Wright, for appellant:

The burden was upon the plaintiff to show actual negligence by the defendant with respect to the manner of keeping or using the explosives.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 502, 503, notes 2, 5; 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 12, notes 66, 67; Walker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 658, 33 N. W. 224; Tuckachinsky v. Lehig & W. B. Coal Co. 199 Pa. 515, 49 Atl. 308; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, Supp. p. 1086; Brown v. Thomas Blackwell Coal & Min. Co. 124 Ky. 324, 99 S. W. 299; People v. Sands, 1 Johns. 78, 3 Am. Dec. 296.

The maintenance of the telephone and wires in the shanty was not negligent in law or in fact, as there was no allegation or proof of any defect of construction or lack of insulation in the shanty, or of the wires leading thereto and therefrom.

Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. McTyer, 137 Ala. 601, 97 Am. St. Rep. 62, 34 So. 1020; Jackson v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 88 Wis. 243, 26 L.R.A. 101, 60 N. W. 430; Joyce, Electric Law, § 453, p. 470; Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Robinson, 16 L.R.A. 545, 1 C. C. A. 684, 2 U. S. App. 205, 50 Fed. 810.

Since the defendant cannot be held to be responsible for the lightning striking in any particular place, Brown's death, being due either to lightning stroke or to explosion caused by direct lightning stroke, has not been proven to be due to any negligence upon the part of the defendant with respect to the location of its supply of explosives, and the submission of the cause to 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the jury, on the theory that the place of storage of the dynamite was negligence, was error.

McClain v. Garden Grove, 83 Iowa, 235, 12 L.R.A. 482, 48 N. W. 1031; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Sulphur Spring Independent School Dist. 96 Pa. 65, 42 Am. Rep. 520; Bruswitz v. Netherland's American Steam Nav. Co. 64 Hun, 262, 19 N. Y. Supp. 75; Knox v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 69 Hun, 93, 23 N. Y. Supp. 198; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 39.

If the deceased was killed while seeking shelter in, or going to seek shelter in, the shanty, he was guilty of contributory negligence such as would, as a matter of law, prevent his recovery, because the possibility of explosion being caused by lightning stroke must be presumed to have been as well known to deceased as to the defendant.

St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 63 L.R.A. 551, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495.

It was only as to assumption of risks arising from alleged negligent method and place of keeping explosives, in the shanty with the telephone, that defendant made allegations and had the burden of proof.

Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. 131 Iowa, 724, 106 N. W. 359; Sankey v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 118 Iowa, 39, 91 N. W. 820.

Whether the alleged negligent cause which contributes to an accident is or is not legally proximate is not determined with reference to the order in which the several contributing elements succeed each other, but with reference to the efficiency of those elements.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 486-b; Neilson v. Gilbert, 69 Iowa, 691, 23 N. W. 666; De Camp v. Sioux City, 74 Iowa, 394, 37 N. W. 971; McClain v. Garden Grove, supra; Burk v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. 126 Iowa, 730, 106 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 793; Phinney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 122 Iowa, 494, 98 N. W. 358; Parmenter v. Marion, 113 Iowa, 297, 85 N. W. 90.

The rule of contemplation of possible injury or damage, or contemplation of consequences, is the test of negligence.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 486.

The defendant will not be liable in negligence for failing to provide against that which a man of ordinary foresight and prudence could not reasonably have anticipated.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 480-g; Watters v. Waterloo, 126 Iowa, 190, 101 N. W. 871; Handelun v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 72 Iowa, 709, 32 N. W. 4; Harvey v. Clarinda, 111 Iowa, 529, 82 N. W. 994; Horn v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 124 Iowa, 284, 90 N. W. 1068; Burk v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. supra.

A party who takes reasonable care to guard against accidents arising from ordinary causes is not liable for accidents arising from extraordinary causes.

Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 11 Exch. 781; Liming v. Illinois C. R. Co. 81 Iowa, 248, 47 N. W. 66; Doyle v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 607, 4 L.R.A. 420, 42 N. W. 555; Hazzard v. Council Bluffs, 79 Iowa, 106, 44 N. W. 219; Osborne v. Van Dyke, 113 Iowa, 557, 54 L.R.A. 367, 85 N. W. 784.

In order that the mere keeping of explosives may be made the basis of an action for damages resulting from an explosion thereof, the facts shown as to the keeping of said explosives must be such as to constitute a nuisance.

Joyce, Nuisances, §§ 44, 383; Laflin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 7 L.R.A. 262, 19 Am. St. Rep. 34, 23 N. E. 389; Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 36 Am. Rep. 654; Tuckachinsky v. Lehigh & W. B. Coal Co. supra; Cook v. Anderson, 85 Ala. 99, 4 So. 713.

Mr. Thomas A. Cheshire for appellee.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant, a coal mining corporation, was engaged in the work of sinking a shaft for mining purposes near the city of Des Moines. The deceased was not a miner by occupation, but had for a short time been employed by the defendant doing work at and about the top of the shaft. After a few weeks of this service, he was put in charge of an engine used in hoisting the excavated material. This engine was not inclosed by any building, the only shelter for the engineer being a small roof or canopy not affording protection against severe storms. The boiler and engine stood north of the shaft, and about 60 feet farther to the north and west was a small frame shanty or building about 10 feet square, in which was a telephone connected with the city system. It was also used as a place where the workmen left their coats and tools, where they sometimes gathered at lunch time, and found shelter from the storms. In it the defendants also deposited powder and dynamite supplied from time to time for use in blasting. The work was being pushed both day and night, the men being employed in three shifts of eight hours each. The deceased was upon the night shift. At least 25 pounds of dynamite were used every twenty-four hours, and, instead of having large quantities of the explosive stored in advance, it was the practice to purchase and bring in boxes of 25 to 50 pounds each, as the progress of the work required, and these boxes were stored in the shanty above described. For some time prior to the date in question, little or no black powder had been used, and a remnant of some 25 or more pounds of that material had been permitted to remain in the same room. On July 17, 1905, a 25-pound box of dynamite was delivered, not more than one half of which had been used at the time of the accident. There was also a supply of dynamite caps for use in exploding blasts. Brown knew, in a general way at least, of the uses made of the shanty. At times he attended to telephone calls, and sometimes carried powder and dynamite from the building to the shaft.

Early in the morning of July 19, 1905, and before the night shift of workmen had been relieved, there occurred a violent rain-storm, accompanied by thunder and lightning, during which the dynamite and powder in the shanty exploded, instantly killing Brown and his four fellow workmen, constituting the entire force then on the work. It is supposed that some, if not all, of the number had gathered in the shanty for shelter from the storm, and that the explosives were ignited by a stroke of lightning. There is no living witness of any of the immediate circumstances of this calamitous occurrence, except a woman who, from a distance of a mile and a half, noticed the lightning stream down in the direction of the shanty and saw the explosion follow almost instantaneously. The nearest neighbor first upon the scene after the explosion, and while the storm was still in progress, found the broken strands of telephone wire dragging on the ground and noticed that from time to time they emitted sparks. To this witness the sound of the powder explosion and the noise of the thunder following the fatal lightning stroke seemed to unite in a single crash. A witness who was at the shanty during the evening before noticed the unused powder, dynamite, and caps, and says that the caps, or some of them, were directly under the telephone instrument. These caps are described as being very sensitive and easily exploded; each having a small copper wire attached, through which to fire the charge by a spark from an electric battery. The body of Brown was found about 30 feet from his engine and 40 feet from the location of the shanty. His legs were torn off, but the remainder of his body was not badly mutilated. There were no powder marks on his face. The bodies of his comrades were for the most part torn in fragments. From these circumstances it is argued by plaintiff that Brown was not in the shanty at the time of the explosion, but was either at his engine or at some point between the engine and the shanty. The defendant is charged with negligence in failing to provide the deceased with a safe place to work, in storing and keeping powder, dynamite, and caps in the building which was the only place provided for the workmen to deposit their tools, clothing, and lunch, and in bringing into said shanty, where such explosives were kept, a telephone connected with wires upon which electric currents were admitted or liable to be conducted, without due regard to the danger of such wires becoming overcharged and causing an explosion such as did in fact result. To this claim the defendant interposes a denial of all negligence on its part. It also pleads that the deceased had been at work in said employment for a considerable period, and was familiar with the conditions there prevailing, and with such knowledge had voluntarily continued in the service without objection or complaint, thereby assuming the risk, if any, attendant thereon. At the close of plaintiff's testimony in chief, the defendant moved for a directed verdict in its favor on the grounds: (1) Of an entire failure of evidence to show negligence on the part of the defendant; (2) failure of the evidence to show that defendant's negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of the intestate's death; and (3) failure of evidence to show that said intestate was himself free from negligence contributing to his death. This motion being overruled, the defendant offered evidence tending to show the general manner in which the work at and about the shaft had been carried on during the time deceased was in its service, the use to which the shanty was ordinarily put, and the knowledge and notice which deceased had of the conditions there prevailing. The motion for a directed verdict was thereupon renewed and again overruled. Certain requests for instructions to the jury were also submitted to the court and refused. After verdict had been returned for the plaintiff, the defendant moved for a new trial, assigning as grounds therefor alleged errors of the trial court in its rulings and instructions, and insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a recovery of damages. This motion being denied and judgment entered on the verdict, the defendant appeals.

1. The first assignment of error argued by counsel is grounded upon the refusal of the trial court to hold, as a matter of law, that plaintiff had failed to establish any negligence on the part of the defendant with respect to the matters alleged in the petition. Argument would hardly seem necessary to show the unsoundness of this proposition. There is, of course, no negligence in the mere fact that defendant employed explosives in sinking the shaft of its mine, for such is the usual and approved, if not a necessary, method by which work of this kind is accomplished; but the fact that such dangerous instrumentalities may be properly used without exposing the employer to a charge of negligence does not by any means imply that he is discharged from the ordinary obligation to use reasonable care to protect his servants against injury therefrom. Indeed, reasonable care demands increased watchfulness and greater caution in proportion to the dangerous nature of the instrumentality employed; that is, "due care" means care which is reasonably commensurate with a known danger and the seriousness of the consequences which are liable to follow its omission. This rule is too familiar and fundamental in the law of negligence to call for any discussion or array of authorities. The negligence charged in this case is not founded upon the use of explosives in the prosecution of the defendant's work, but in the alleged lack of care in keeping and storing them. This, under all ordinary circumstances, is a question of fact. For the court to say as a matter of law that in storing powder, dynamite, and dynamite caps in dangerous quantities in the same and only room provided for the use of the workmen for refuge from the storm, and keeping their tools, clothing, and lunches, the defendant exercised the full measure of its duty in the premises, would in our judgment be a very serious encroachment upon the time-honored province of the jury. It is no answer to this charge that there was no other convenient place to keep these explosives. The construction of a sufficient shelter or receptacle for that purpose, detached from the assembling place of the workmen, was a matter of but a few moments, or at the most few hours, work and very slight expense, and, to say the very least, the question whether reasonable care did not require such precaution was a fair one for the consideration of the triers of fact. Nor is negligence negatived by the fact that the explosion was an unusual or extraordinary occurrence, if there was negligence in creating the conditions. Dulligan v. Barber, Asphalt Paving Co. 201 Mass. 227, 87 N. E. 567.

2. It is also argued that, even if the defendant was negligent in keeping the explosives in the shanty, we are wholly without evidence from which to find that this failure of duty was the proximate cause of the disaster. "Who can tell," counsel ask, "what was the cause of the explosion,—whether lightning or some reckless or thoughtless act of the workmen? If it was lightning, who can tell whether the stroke was not itself fatal to the men there as sembled, independent of the resulting explosion? If the death of the party resulted by the explosion of the powder and dynamite, and they were discharged by a bolt of electricity, is not this an independent intervening agency which breaks the line of causation between the defendant's negligence and the death of the plaintiff's intestate?" The argument is a plausible one, but we think it cannot prevail. It is very true that it is not within human power to discover and make known with certainty all of the immediate circumstances attendant upon this tragedy, but such exact and detailed proof is not required. Courts and juries are not infrequently confronted by cases in which the ultimate facts of cause and effect are to be found, not so much from direct proof of the circumstances as they exist at the instant of the injury complained of, as from proof of conditions existing before and after its occurrence. For instance, in the recent case of Lunde v. Cudahy Packing Co. 139 Iowa, 688, 117 N. W. 1063, the body of the deceased was found upon the floor of the room in which he was employed, and there had been no eyewitness of the cause or manner of his death, yet the circumstances were such as to show with moral certainty that he had fallen into the wheel pit, through which he had been whirled upon the spokes of the wheel and cast out again. The plaintiff is not required to make his case beyond a reasonable doubt. It is sufficient if the circumstances be such as to justify a reasonable inference of the truth of the matters charged. 2 Enc. Ev. p. 956.

In most cases the relation between cause and effect is a matter of inference only, but the conclusion is none the less satisfactory to the reasonable mind. A finding that the life of the deceased in this case was destroyed by the explosion of the powder and dynamite, and not by the lightning stroke, has ample support in the record. The place where the body was found and the manner in which it was dismembered point unmistakably to the explosion as an all-sufficient explanation of the cause of his death, while there is not the slightest circumstance to support the theory that he was killed by lightning. In Brownfield v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 107 Iowa, 258, 77 N. W. 1038, we stated the rule to be that "when a cause is shown which might produce an accident in a certain way, and an accident happens in that manner, it is a warrantable presumption, in the absence of showing of other cause, that the one known was the operative agency in bringing about the result." It is here shown without dispute that the explosives were in the shanty, that they were discharged wrecking the building, and that the persons first coming to the scene of destruction found the bodies, or the remnants of the bodies, of the five workmen scattered in and about the ruins. No other efficient cause for such results is shown, and to argue the possibility that these men were stricken dead by lightning is to indulge in conjecture pure and simple. Nor are we able to say that, if the explosives were discharged by an electric bolt entering the building, it demonstrates the intervention of an independent agency which breaks the line of causation from defendant's negligent act, and renders the death of the deceased so clearly accidental or providential that no right of recovery exists. This feature of the case presents a question upon which there is much confusion in the authorities, and decisions may readily be found that, where some uncontrollable manifestation of nature unites with human negligence in causing injury to persons or property, the negligence of the human agent is treated as a condition, and not a cause of the injury, and relieves him from legal liability. The origin of this rule is hinted at in the ancient formula by which every destructive exhibition of the laws of nature was denominated "an act of God," from which idea it was easy to reach the pious conclusion that an injury which had been caused or contributed to by the hand of God ought not to be made the basis for the recovery of damages before human tribunals: but this theory has been discarded by many courts, and among them is our own. The subject was treated with great thoroughness by Mr. Justice McClain in Green-Wheeler Shoe Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 130 Iowa, 123, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 882, 106 N. W. 498, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 45, and by Mr. Justice Deemer in Vyse v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 126 Iowa, 90, 101 N. W. 736. The rule is there laid down that, when negligence of a responsible person concurs with a flood or storm or other so-called "act of God" in producing an injury, the party guilty of such negligence will be held liable for the injurious consequences, if the injury would not have happened but for his failure to exercise care. These precedents are of such recent date, and treat the subject so exhaustively, that we need not here reopen the discussion farther than to say we are still satisfied with the legal and logical soundness of the rule there announced. That a person whose negligence is the primary cause is not excused because a stroke of lightning intervenes to precipitate an injury, see Jackson v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 88 Wis. 243, 26 L.R.A. 101, 60 N. W. 430. The general subject of proximate cause and intervening agencies in cases of negligence is also treated quite fully in Burke v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. 126 Iowa, 730, 106 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 793; Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co. 127 Iowa, 483, 103 N. W. 481; Phinney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 122 Iowa, 488, 98 N. W. 358; Gould v. Schermer, 101 Iowa, 588, 70 N. W. 697.

It is to be observed in this connection that plaintiff charges the defendant not only with negligence in keeping the explosives in the shanty, but also alleges that it negligently increased the hazard thus created by establishing a telephone in the same room with connecting wire or wires, upon which, in case of storms, an overcharge of electricity was liable to be conducted, causing the ignition of the powder, dynamite, or caps. The fact of installing and connecting the telephone as alleged is not denied, but it is said there is no evidence that this condition had anything to do with the accident. No witness testifies—none can testify—that lightning did strike the building, or that electricity in dangerous force did enter it over the wire; but proof of a condition which rendered such results possible was a material circumstance with reference to the safety of the place. See Jackson v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. supra. The liability of telephone wires to be surcharged with electricity during violent storms is well known to all persons familiar with their use. It is shown by plaintiff's witnesses that the broken end of this particular wire continued to emit sparks for some time after the explosion, indicating that, by reason of the condition of the atmosphere, or because of contact with other conductors carrying heavy currents, electricity in quantities capable of doing the alleged mischief was being brought into the immediate vicinity where the explosives had been stored; but we think it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to point out or demonstrate the manner in which the explosives were ignited. Indeed, it would not necessarily be a defense to the action, even if the record should demonstrate beyond all doubt that the immediate cause of the explosion was not chargeable to the negligence of any person. If the defendant was negligent in depositing the powder and dynamite in a place where their accidental ignition would necessarily endanger the lives of its servants, such negligence would be the proximate cause of the resulting injury, notwithstanding the source of the spark which explodes them be purely accidental or wholly unknown. Tissue v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 112 Pa. 91, 56 Am. Rep. 310, 3 Atl. 667. That blasting powder and other high-power explosives of modern invention are liable to accidental ignition, with destructive consequences, even where apparently reasonable care is exercised to prevent such occurrence, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) has been too frequently proven by recurring disasters to call for argument, and, if there be lack of reasonable care in storing them too near the servant's place of work, such negligence is not purged by the exercise of care in other respects.

3. As in all personal injury cases, there must be testimony from which the jury can properly find freedom from contributory negligence on the part of the deceased, in order to sustain a recovery of damages. In this respect it is contended that the plaintiff has failed. It must be remembered, however, that in the utter absence of living witnesses, there is a presumption that the deceased, actuated by the natural instincts of self-preservation, was in the exercise of reasonable care for his own safety. Phinney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 122 Iowa, 492, 98 N. W. 358; Hopkinson v. Knapp & S. Co. 92 Iowa, 328, 60 N. W. 653; Dalton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 104 Iowa, 28, 73 N. W. 349; Mynning v. Detroit, J. & N. R. Co. 64 Mich. 93, 8 Am. St. Rep. 804, 31 N. W. 147; Lyman v. Boston & M. R. Co. 66 N. H. 200, 11 L.R.A. 364, 20 Atl. 976; Cassidy v. Angell, 12 R. I. 447, 34 Am. Rep. 600; Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co. 20 N. Y. 65, 75 Am. Dec. 375. True, this presumption is not conclusive, and may be rebutted by proof of circumstances tending to the opposite conclusion, but such proof can rarely, if ever, be made so clear and unmistakable as to enable the court to dispose of the issue thus presented as a matter of law. We find no such showing here, nor do counsel point out any fact or circumstance which they rely upon to overcome this presumption. Even if it should be said that reasonable care on the part of the deceased would have forbidden his entrance to the shanty under the circumstances then surrounding him, it is a sufficient answer that it is by no means certain that he did enter or was in the building when the explosion occurred. The question of contributory negligence was properly left to the jury.

4. The conclusions already announced dispose of the principal issues presented in this case, except the defense of assumption of risk, pleaded by the defendant. It is a familiar doctrine that the servant assumes all risks which inhere in or are incident to the nature and kind of service which he undertakes to perform, and, if such service involves the use of explosives or other dangerous instrumentalities, he takes upon himself the chances of all injury to which he may be exposed by their reasonable and proper use; but, as we have often had occasion to say, the servant does not assume any risk created by the negligence of his master, unless he knows and appreciates, or as a reasonably prudent person ought to.

know and appreciate, the peril arising from the master's negligence, and chooses to remain in the service,—in which latter event he is barred from the recovery of damage if injured. Assumption of risk on account of the master's negligence is an affirmative defense. It has been properly pleaded in the case before us and presents the most seriously debatable question argued by counsel. A careful consideration of the record inclines us to the view that in this, as in other respects mentioned, there was no error in submitting the issue to the jury. It must not be overlooked that, as already stated, this defense is affirmative in character, and that the issue thus presented is one of fact, on which the parties are entitled to have a verdict unless the opposing view is one upon which reasonable minds are not likely to differ. The testimony tends to show that, until coming into the service of the defendant, Brown had no experience in mining or in sinking mine shafts. It does not appear that he had any prior experience in works of excavation or in the care or use of explosives. He had been a butcher, farmer, and had had some experience with threshing machines. The boiler he was using at the defendant's mining shaft was part of a threshing outfit belonging to him. While it is shown that at times, though not repeatedly, he carried dynamite from the shanty to the shaft, and doubtless knew in a general way that it was a powerful explosive, it is at least doubtful whether he was aware of its sensitive character, or understood the gravity of the peril to which those working in the vicinity were thereby exposed. The seeming indifference or confidence manifested by the defendant's managers in depositing and keeping these materials in the same shelter provided for the use and convenience of the workmen would naturally quiet the fears of an inexperienced employee. So far as shown, he was given no instructions or warning concerning the danger to be apprehended from this source. There is no charge of negligence in failing to warn or instruct the deceased with respect to this danger, but, in considering his conduct with reference to the question of assumption of risk, the fact whether he did have such notice or warning is relevant and material, because the rule as to assumption of risk has its basis in the servant's actual or constructive knowledge of the peril to which he is exposed. Reed v. Stockmeyer, 20 C. C. A. 381, 34 U. S. App. 727, 74 Fed. 186. See also cases collected in 2 Labatt's Master & Servant, § 271, note. Bearing upon the care required of the master in keeping and handling explosives, and assumption of risk therefrom by the servant, the cases of 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. ed. 464, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464, and Welch v. Bath Iron Works, 98 Me. 361, 57 Atl. 88, are quite in point. In view, therefore, of all the circumstances disclosed by the record, and the law which places the burden of establishing this defense upon the master, we cannot say there was any error in submitting it to the finding of the jury.

5. Other questions argued by counsel are incidental or subsidiary to those already considered, and we shall not attempt their minute consideration. It is urged, and for the purposes of the case it may be conceded, that defendant is not necessarily chargeable with negligence because it kept dynamite near the shaft, or because it installed the telephone in the shanty for the conveniences of its business; but it does not follow from this concession that the use of a single small room for the installation of the telephone, for the deposit of the explosives, and for the general convenience and shelter of the workmen, did not together constitute a dangerous combination which due care would have avoided.

In one of its instructions to the jury, the court, as the record would seem to indicate, used the word "prudent," where it evidently intended to say "imprudent;" but the whole trend and substance of the charge makes the inadvertence so very clear that we cannot conceive of any juror of average intelligence being thereby misled, and it is incredible that the defendant suffered any prejudice therefrom. We have often held that mere verbal inaccuracies of this kind are not reversible errors. Flam v. Lee, 116 Iowa, 289, 93 Am. St. Rep. 242, 90 N. W. 70; Meyer v. Baird, 120 Iowa, 597, 94 N. W. 1129; Schaefer v. Anchor Mut. F. Ins. Co. 133 Iowa, 205, 100 N. W. 857, 110 N. W. 470; Smith v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 115 Iowa, 217, 56 L.R.A. 271, 91 Am. St. Rep. 153, 88 N. W. 368.

No ground for setting aside the verdict being shown, the judgment of the District Court is therefore affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied, September 28, 1909.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

H. L. SMITH'S ADMINISTRATOR, Appt.,
v.
NORTH JELICO COAL COMPANY.

(131 Ky. 196, 114 S. W. 785.)

Master — failure to prop mine roof — death of miner — liability.

The employer of a miner engaged in cutting into a seam of coal, whose employment requires him to see that props are placed as fast as needed, is not liable for the miner's death, due to his failure to prop the roof soon enough, so that it falls upon and kills him.

(Nunn, J., dissents.)

(December 18, 1908.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Knox County, entered upon a directed verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the killing of plaintiff's intestate, which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. C. Marshall and S. B. Dishman & Son, with Mr. James Andrew Scott, for appellant:

The defendant is liable, as he had undertaken to make the place of work safe.

White House Coal Co. v. Cochran, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 636; McFarland v. Harbison & W. Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 746, 82 S. W. 430; Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 2, 279a; George T. Stagg Co. v. Brightwell, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1220, 92 S. W. 8; Gaines & Co. v. Johnson, 133 Ky. 507, 105 S. W. 381; Pfisterer v. Peter, 117 Ky. 501, 78 S. W. 450; Ashland Coal & I. Co. v. Wallace, 101 Ky. 628, 42 S. W. 744, 43 S. W. 207; Louisville Bolt & Iron Co. v. Hart, 122 Ky. 731, 92 S. W. 951; Cohankus Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 747, 96 S. W. 437; Vansesse v. Catsburg Coal Co. 159 Pa. 403, 28 Atl.

Note.—Applicability of rule as to safe place where the conditions of work are changing.

This subject is treated in an exhaustive note to Citrone v. O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 340. And upon the somewhat analogous subject of applicability of rule as to safe place where servants are engaged in the work of removing dangerous conditions, see note to Neagle v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 321.

In the earlier note it is shown that there is a well-recognized exception to the rule requiring the master to furnish a reasonably safe place for his servant where the conditions of the place are constantly changing as the work progresses.

This exception to the rule is thus stated in Bridges v. Los Angeles P. R. Co. 156 Cal. 492, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 914, 105 Pac. 586: "Where the place in which the work is to be done and the appliances to be used are in themselves as safe as can reasonably be expected, and the danger arises necessarily in the doing of the work, the master has discharged his duty when he has furnished to the employee suitable means of obviating the danger."

And in Rocky Mountain Bell Teleph. Co. v. Bassett, 178 Fed. 768, the court said: "If the work is one of construction or repair, the risks incident to the place and the work are assumed by the employee, and the master's duty of maintaining a safe place is not so broad as to charge him with injuries to the employee which result from the place becoming unsafe under exigencies created in the progress of the work, which could not have been anticipated. But where an employee is called from other work, and is set to work in an excavation, he has the right to assume that the master has investigated the conditions, and that the place was safe, unless the danger is plain and obvious."

This exception has been recognized and applied in the following cases, where the servant was injured while engaged in performing the work indicated: Graham v. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Thrall (Ark.) 129 S. W. 532 (construction and equipment of sawmill plant); Tobler v. Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co. (Ala.) 52 So. 86 (repairing tracks over furnaces in iron plant); Wight v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (Ky.) 125 S. W. 718 (removing telephone wires strung in close proximity to electric light wires); Gunzfsky v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co. 145 Ill. App. 255 (excavating for wall); Lammey v. Center Coal Min. Co. (Iowa) 123 N. W. 356 (mining); Dunn v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. (Mich.) 126 N. W. 833 (excavating canal); Robichaud v. Mendell, 75 N. H. 391, 74 Atl. 1049 (erecting a scaffold for use of masons); Lewis v. Gehlen, 136 App. Div. 855, 122 N. Y. Supp. 89 (constructing building); A. H. Jacoby Co. v. Williams (Va.) 65 S. E. 491 (grading down rocky hill); McPherson v. Great Northern R. Co. 140 Wis. 473, 122 N. W. 1022 (repairing bridge).

In speaking of the duty resting upon the master while the conditions of the place are changing with the progress of the work, the court in Tobler v. Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co. supra, said: "The duty which originally rests upon the master to furnish safe ways, works, and machinery for the time being, and for the purpose of construction or repair, is suspended."

Other cases, however, hold that the master's duty is in no wise lessened by the fact that the progress of the work necessarily changes the condition and increases the danger. He still must use reasonable care to make the place reasonably safe, although in such a case the result of his care may not, as a matter of fact, render the place as safe as it would be if the progress of the work did not necessarily change the conditions.

Thus, in Gorsegner v. Burnham, 142 Wis. 486, 125 N. W. 914, the court said the duty of making a place reasonably safe in no wise ceased because of the fact that repairs were in progress; that, at most, would be one of the circumstances bearing on the question of what would constitute reasonable safety, and on the measure of notice to an employee of the existence of some de-200; Eddy v. Aurora Min. Co. 81 Mich. 548, 46 N. W. 17; Lexington & C. County Min. Co. v. Stephens, 104 Ky. 502, 47 S. W. 321.

Messrs. James D. Black, B. B. Golden, and Pitzer D. Black for appellee.

Barker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

H. L. Smith, the decedent of the appellant, was engaged in operating a coal-cutting machine in the coal mines of appellee in Knox county, Kentucky. At the time of the accident which caused his death, he was engaged in what is called "turning a room" from one of the main entries. The passage-way which he was cutting was about 10 feet wide, and was to extend some little distance from the main entry before the room was turned. Smith had cut in some 8 or 10 feet, and the coal had been taken out. The top of the mine was of slate, and had a hill seam running across it. At best the top was bad, being what the miners term a "rotten top," and the hill seam, which was a large crack through which water percolated into the mine, made it still worse. Smith's business was simply to undercut the coal with a machine which was operated by compressed air, and then there were men, called "shovelers" and "shooters," whose business it was to come in and bore holes in the face of the coal, which were loaded with powder, and the coal so undercut was blown down by the explosion of the powder, after which the shovelers would remove it by loading it into cars, by which it was transported to the mouth of the mine and onto the tippie. It was also the duty of these shovelers and shooters to pull down any loose, overhanging slate, and to carry it out of the room, so that it would be out of the way. It was their duty to observe whether the slate was about to fall, or in danger of falling, and this they did by tapping it with picks or shovels, judging by the sound as to whether there was any immediate danger of its falling. If there was, it was their duty to pull down the slate so as to prevent its falling on the miner operating the machine. The evidence shows, however, that there was always danger of slate falling after the coal was removed for any considerable space, and it appears that, in order to make the roof of a mine safe when the coal is removed, it is necessary at short distances to prop the roof with logs or props cut for and adjusted to that purpose. There were other men in attendance or employment who are called "gin men," which word seems to be a contraction of the word "general," and means men who have no special employment in the mines, but who do general work, such as bringing in props, or doing any other thing which they are ordered to do. One of the duties of the gin men was to bring in props whenever, in the opinion of the miner, it was necessary for safety to prop the roof of the mine where the operation was going for-fects or perils. "The duty persisted to make the place reasonably safe."

And the exception to the safe-place rule does not free a master from liability for injuries received by working in a place which became dangerous by the progress of the work, where such danger could have been foreseen and guarded against by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence on the part of the master. Flanagan v. F. W. Carlin Constr. Co. 134 App. Div. 236, 118 N. Y. Supp. 953.

So, the exception to the safe-place rule is inapplicable where the servant is acting under the immediate direction of the master's representative (Bennett v. Crystal Carbonate Lime Co. [Mo. App.] 124 S. W. 608), or is working with an assurance by the master that there is no danger (Owensboro v. Gabbert, 135 Ky. 346, 122 S. W. 178), or where the place was dangerous when the servant was set at work (Buchanan v. Murayda [Tex. Civ. App.] 124 S. W. 973).

So, the exception does not apply where the injury did not result from the changing conditions in the prosecution of the work, but from the negligence of the master's foreman in an entirely different matter. Casey v. Kelly-Atkinson Constr. Co. 240 Ill. 416, 88 N. E. 982.

Where a servant, in digging a trench, was injured by its caving in, which was caused by the negligence of the master in connection with another trench, about 3 feet from the one in which the servant was digging, it was held in Rocky Mountain Bell Teleph. Co. v. Bassett, supra, that the exception to the safe-place rule was not applicable.

And the master is liable when the necessary and transient dangers of the service, created by the progress of the work, are increased without warning by the negligence of the master. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Foland (Ind. App.) 88 N. E. 787.

In many cases cited in both the earlier note and the present one, it is said that the servant assumes the risks which are created by the changing conditions of the work. The risks arising, however, from dangers created by the progress of the work, are considered as ordinary dangers, and therefore to have been within the contemplation of the parties when the servant entered the employment. Such ordinary risks are the risks which remain after the master has fully performed his duty; in other words, where the master is not negligent; and consequently the reason that the servant cannot recover for injuries received by dangers due to the changing condition of the work is not primarily because he has as-ward. Just before the decedent went into the room where he met with the accident which caused his death, the shooters and shovelers cleaned it up and made such investigation as led them to believe that it was safe, and they informed the decedent that they were ready for him to cut. He went in with his machine, and, after cutting there some little time, a large piece of slate which had become loosened fell upon him, and so crushed him as to cause his death in a few weeks thereafter. To recover damages for this accident this action was instituted; the petition alleging that the master was negligent in failing to furnish him with a safe place in which to work. The answer placed in issue the material allegations of the petition, and pleaded contributory negligence. Upon the trial of the case, after plaintiff's evidence was all in, the trial court awarded the defendant a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for it; and to test the correctness of this ruling this appeal is prosecuted.

There is no doubt that the evidence shows the roof of the room where the decedent was working was bad, and its natural danger was enhanced by the existence of the hill seam running across it. This condition was known to all the employees, being perfectly obvious to the eye. The evidence for plaintiff shows that, while it was the duty of the shooters to pull down loose slate and carry it out, after all, it was the duty of the decedent to judge of the safety of his surroundings himself. The very work that he was doing made the room dangerous unless it was propped, and it was his duty, whenever he needed or thought he needed props, to call for them, and the gin men were required to bring them in and put them up. The evidence shows that after the coal is taken out for any considerable space the room becomes dangerous. And this must necessarily be so. The enormous pressure of the mountain from above has a tendency to crush in the top of the mine after the coal which had formerly supported it has been removed, and when the coal was removed for any considerable space, ordinary care for his own safety required the decedent to have the room propped. This he failed to do in time to prevent the injury which occurred to him. The situation in which the decedent was placed constitutes an exception to the general rule that the master must furnish the servant with a safe place in which to work. The danger of the place in which he was working was made or created by the very work which the servant was doing. Every time he cut out a block of coal, he increased the danger of the roof falling in, unless it was propped as before explained. The decedent did not call for props, and when he had taken out sufficient coal to cause the pressure from above to break the slate, so that it fell upon him, the resulting injury was caused by his own fault, and of necessity his estate must suffer this loss.

sumed such risks, but because the master is not liable, not having been guilty of any breach of the duty owing to the servant.

Upon the question, May a servant assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence? see note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. ante, 1207.

Of course, if, in connection with the changing conditions of the work, the master is negligent, and the servant is injured directly because of such negligence, then the servant may be said to have assumed the risk if, with knowledge of such negligence, he continues in the service without complaint and promise to repair on the part of the master. In such a case, the master must rely expressly upon the servant's assumption of risk to relieve himself of the negligence, but, in the other case, as was said, the servant does not make out even a prima facie cause of action.

The question presented by cases of this character, therefore, is rather one involving the duty of the master, than one involving the effect of a contract or waiver by the defendant, and these cases are more properly referable to the so-called safe-place rule than to the rule as to assumption of risk. It is to be noted in SMITH v. NORTH JELLICO COAL Co., that the court does not in any way suggest a reference to the rule as to assumption of risk, but bases its decision entirely upon the ground that the case was not a proper one for the application of the doctrine of safe place.

Although the courts do frequently confuse the rule, and invoke the doctrine of assumed risk apparently as a defense for the master when he has not been guilty of any breach of duty for which he is even prima facie liable, it would seem that it is much more logical, and certainly much less misleading, to place the nonliability of the master squarely upon the ground upon which his nonliability in such cases must ultimately end, viz., the absence of any duty upon his part toward the servant to remove the dangers causing the injury. The doctrine of assumption of risk could then be used in the only place in which it is a distinct proposition of law; viz., where it is an affirmative defense relied upon by the master to relieve himself from liability for injuries which are caused by his negligence, and for which he is prima facie liable.

As to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servant, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, ante, 1250. W. M. G.

Labatt, in his work on Master and Servant, § 588, says: "One special application of the general conception underlying the rule stated in the preceding section is that, where the work is of such a character that, as it progresses, the environment of the servant must necessarily undergo frequent changes, the master is not bound to protect the servants engaged in it against the dangers resulting from those changes." In Durst v. Carnegie Steel Co. 173 Pa. 162, 33 Atl. 1102, it was held that where the place, as it stands when the work begins, is perfectly safe, and the danger can only arise as the work progresses, and be caused by the work done, it is not the duty of the employer to stand by during the progress of the work, to see when a danger arises; that it is sufficient if he provides against such danger as may possibly or probably arise, and gives the workmen the means of protecting themselves. In Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Brown, 20 C. C. A. 147, 34 U. S. App. 769, 73 Fed. 970, it was held that the duty of a master to provide his servants a safe place in which to work does not attach where the place becomes dangerous in the progress of the work, either necessarily or from the manner in which the work is done. To the same effect is Baird v. Reilly, 35 C. C. A. 78, 63 U. S. App. 157, 92 Fed. 884; O'Connell v. Clark, 22 App. Div. 466, 43 N. Y. Supp. 74. The evidence, as said before, showed that it was the duty of the decedent to call for props when he needed them, and that it appears the danger of the place where he was working was constantly changing and increasing as the work progressed, unless the roof was propped. It necessarily results that, as he failed to take the ordinary precaution to prevent injury to himself, he alone must bear the resulting injury.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the trial court correctly ruled in awarding the peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the defendant at the close of plaintiff's evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

Nunn, J., dissenting (filed January 20, 1909): 135 Ky. 834, 123 S. W. 256.

The facts as stated in the opinion delivered do not agree with my construction of them. Therefore it is necessary for me to state my reasons for dissenting. A misunderstanding by the court of the facts as they appear in the record is the only way that I can account for the result.

In considering this case, it should be kept in mind that the court was not asked to reverse a judgment based upon a verdict of a properly instructed jury, but its duty, and only duty, was to carefully examine the record, and ascertain, first, whether appellant stated in his pleadings a cause of action; if so, then to determine whether he introduced any or a scintilla of testimony sustaining his alleged cause of action. If it was found that he had complied with these requirements, he was entitled to have his case submitted to the jury. All the decisions of this court on the question sustain the proposition. If appellant introduced any testimony supporting his alleged cause of action, it is then the duty of this court to reverse the action of the lower court in giving the peremptory instruction. It was a violation of the lower court's lawful duty to usurp the functions of the jury in weighing the evidence, and deciding the case as it thought the evidence warranted. The Constitution of the state guarantees to persons the right of trial by jury, and, when a court takes this right from a person, it usurps its power. It is not contended that appellant failed to state a cause of action in his pleadings. Therefore the only question to be considered is: Was there any or a scintilla of evidence introduced sustaining appellant's cause of action? Upon this matter I will not content myself with the bare assertion that there was; but will quote from the testimony of each and every witness introduced, showing that there was not only a "scintilla," but much testimony sustaining his cause of action.

There were ten witnesses introduced, only seven of whom gave testimony upon the question involved. The other three were the widow, the administrator, and the physician who attended him, by whom the extent of Smith's injuries and the cause of his death were shown. It is conceded that the law required appellee to furnish Smith a reasonably safe place in which to perform his work, and to use reasonable care to keep it reasonably safe for that purpose. This is a general rule of law that cannot be successfully controverted. The term, "reasonably safe place," must be construed in connection with the work to be performed. There cannot be found in a coal mine, powder house, or similar places, a safe place to labor. The meaning of the phrase is that the master must use due care, considering the place where the work is to be done, in making the place reasonably safe and in keeping it so. If the character of the work is unusually dangerous, there then arises the necessity of more care on the part of the master to provide and keep a reasonably safe place for the protection of the employee, and more care is also required on the part of the employee to save himself from injury. The following quotation from the case of Pfisterer v. Peter, 117 Ky. 501, 78 S. W. 450, emphasizes this principle, to wit: "A master employing a servant impliedly engages with him that the place in which he is to work and the tools or machinery with which he is to work or by which he is to be surrounded shall be reasonably safe. It is the master who is to provide the place and the tools and the machinery, and, when he employs one to enter into his service, he impliedly says to him that there is no other danger in the place, the tools, and the machinery than such as is obvious and necessary. Of course, some places of work and some kinds of machinery are more dangerous than others, but that is something which inheres in the thing itself, which is a matter of necessity, and cannot be obviated. But within such limits the master who provides the place, the tools, and the machinery owes a positive duty to his employee in respect thereto. That positive duty does not go to the extent of a guaranty of safety, but it does require that reasonable precautions be taken to secure safety, and it matters not to the employee by whom that safety is secured, or the reasonable precautions therefor taken. He has a right to look to the master for the discharge of that duty; and if the master, instead of discharging it himself, sees fit to have it attended to by others, that does not change the measure of obligation to the employee, or the latter's right to insist that reasonable precaution shall be taken to secure safety in these respects."

I will now proceed to show from the record that appellee did not furnish Smith a reasonably safe place to work, or use any care whatever to put and keep it in a reasonably safe condition.

James Woodward, the helper of Smith at the time he received his injuries, in speaking of the place where Smith was killed, testified as follows:

Q. Now, tell the jury if there was a hill seam there, and, if there was, where it ran with reference to the entry?

A. Yes; there was one.

Q. Describe that seam the best you can, as if you were describing a crack in a room? The width or depth, and how it ran with reference to the entry and neck of the room?

A. It ran across the entry and across into the corner of the room neck.

Q. Which side of the room neck?

A. Left-hand side.

Q. Tell the jury what kind of a top that was at this room neck and along that entry at that place.

A. Most of it was bad top.

Q. What do you mean by "bad top"—rotten top?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whose duty it was to look after that?

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

A. I suppose the bank boss was supposed to look after it.

Q. To what extent was that bad top around in that neighborhood?

A. Most of it around there was bad.

George Owens, with reference to the same subject, testified as follows:

Q. Describe the condition at the top of that mine where the room neck was turned off where Smith was hurt?

A. I don't know whether the room was cut the last time I was in there before he was hurt. There was loose slate hanging in places. It is called a bad entry.

Henry Davidson testified as follows:

Q. Tell the jury if you know what was the condition of that top?

A. It was a pretty bad top.

Q. What is a bad top?

A. Loose, bad top.

Q. Is there such a thing as a rotten top?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell the jury whether or not this was rotten?

A. Yes; it was rotten.

Q. Did you notice any hill seam there?

A. Yes.

Q. Explain to the jury. If they weakened the top, how they do it?

A. It runs in on the rib and weakens one side of it.

Q. State whether or not the slate is more liable to fall where there is a hill seam than where there is none?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What ought to be done to make it safe in case of a hill seam?

A. It ought to be timbered to make it safe.

We find that there was ample proof that appellee failed to furnish Smith a reasonably safe place to work; but it is said or intimated in the opinion that it was the duty of Smith to call for props and place them so as to protect himself. This is not the fact. It was not his duty to clean up this room or entry, and make them safe by the use of props or by other means.

The witness Woodward, in speaking of the duties of Smith, testified as follows:

Q. The only thing he (Smith) was connected with was simply running that machine?

A. Yes.

Q. The company had other men to look after props and other work?

A. Yes.

Witness Owens said:

Q. In cutting that entry, Smith had nothing to do about fixing the roof?

A. No, sir; it wasn't his duty to fix the roof.

Witness Davidson testified as follows:

Q. What duties are incumbent on the man who runs the machine?

A. Cut coal for the loaders.

Q. In what way do they ascertain where to cut? Who directs them to the place where they shall cut?

A. The man that loads the coal.

Q. What are the duties of the machine man with reference to looking after the safety of the roof where he works?

A. He ain't got any, I don't suppose.

Q. Who does that?

A. The loaders.

Q. State whether or not it is the duty of the machine man, when he goes to cut this coal, after he understands a place is ready—is it his duty to look after the roof or safety of a place where he cuts?

A. They hardly ever do. He takes the loader's word for whatever he tells him.

Thomas Profit gave the following testimony:

Q. State what you do as a loader?

A. I clean the place up ready for the machine man to cut.

Q. Does the machine man get any part of your wages?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any connection with his wages in your work? Does he pay you anything, or do you pay him anything out of your wages?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does the machine man have anything to do with what you do?

A. No, sir.

Q. What does the machine man do?

A. He cuts coal.

Q. Operates the machine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that all he does?

A. Yes, sir.

John Profit also said:

Q. Are you acquainted with the duties of the machine man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does he do?

A. He just cuts the coal.

Q. After he cuts the coal, does he have anything further to do with it?

A. No, sir.

Q. After he cuts the place, what does he do with his machine?

A. Loads it up and goes to another place, where it is cleaned up.

Q. How does he know where to go when the place is ready?

A. The loaders generally tell him.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. How do they report to him?

A. When they get a place cleaned up, they tell him it is ready.

Q. When you tell him it is ready, what does he understand that to mean?

(Defendant objects. Objection sustained.)

It was the duty of the loaders to clean up the room and pull down the loose slate, and prop the entry for the protection of the machine man and his helper.

The witness Aaron Jones testified that he and one Mullens were employed by appellee as loaders, and continued as follows:

Q. Where was he (Smith) when you saw him last, before the slate fell on him?

A. Unloading his machine to cut that.

Q. Who had charge of that place where the slate fell on him?

A. Me and Richard Mullens.

Q. Your duties were to load coal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What other duties did you have?

A. Pull down all loose slate.

Q. Who did you pull the slate down for, and what for?

A. For the machine man, to keep it from falling down in his way.

Q. What do you mean when you say you are ready for him to go to work?

A. I've done my duty.

Q. What does he understand?

A. That I have done my duty.

Q. Does he understand that you have tested it and made it safe?

A. Of course, he does.

Q. It is the duty of the loader to notify the machine man when he is ready?

A. Yes, sir.

The witness Owens testified as follows:

Q. What was the duty of the loader as to preparing the place for the machine man to work?

A. It was his place to see that the place was all right for the machine man, and pull down loose slate, and see that the props were all right.

Q. State whether or not the machine man had anything to do about looking after the roof of the mine where he worked, or whether that was his duty?

A. I don't suppose it was his duty.

Q. To whom was he to look for conditions?

A. He was to go to the loader if the place was not in shape. He looked to the loader to see that his place was all right.

The witness Thomas Profit also testified:

Q. How long have you followed the occupation as a loader?

A. About seven or eight years.

Q. Tell all the duties of a loader?

A. To see that the room is cleaned up. Pull down the loose slate and fix it up for the machine man to cut.

Q. Why does he pull the slate down.

A. To keep the machine man from getting hurt.

Q. Who is it that looks after the safety of the place where the machine man works?

(Defendant objects; objections sustained.)

Q. Did the company have anybody to inspect these places and make them safe for these men?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was that?

A. Gin hands.

See the quotation from his testimony, copied above.

The witness John Profit said:

Q. What particular employment did you have in the mines, and do you have now?

A. Loading coal.

Q. How long have you been engaged in that occupation?

A. Eight or nine years.

Q. Tell the jury what is the duty of a coal loader, and what he does.

A. His duty is to clean up, I suppose, and pull down the slate.

Q. What does he load?

A. Coal.

Q. What else do you do, if anything?

A. That's all—load coal and set timber.

Q. Do you do anything else?

A. Yes, sir; pull slate.

I have shown that there is testimony in the record that the place where Smith was put to work was very unsafe. Indeed, this is conceded in the opinion by the court. I have also shown that it was not Smith's duty to make or keep it in a safe condition. This duty devolved upon the loaders or "bank boss," Martin. I will now proceed to show that the bank boss, Martin, marked the place, which was, in effect, an order to Smith to cut this room neck, where he was killed; that Martin knew of the hill seam, which crossed the roof of the entry at an angle of about 45 degrees, and entered the place that Smith was directed to cut; that he told a witness that he was going to prop it, and that he also knew of the rotten condition of the roof, and so did the loaders, for some time before Smith was killed. And there is not the slightest testimony appearing in the record that they or any of them informed Smith of these conditions, nor is there any testimony showing that Smith knew of these facts, except from the statements of some of the witnesses to the effect that they supposed he knew, as the defects were patent to them.

The witness Aaron Jones, one of the loaders, after stating that Smith had made one cut in that room the evening before to a depth of 4½ or 5 feet, continued as follows:

Q. Had you seen the bank boss, David Martin, after that first cut, had been taken out?

A. No, sir.

Q. When had you seen him?

A. That morning before I finished taking it out.

Q. Whereabouts?

A. Right at that place.

Q. What was said between you and him at that time?

A. Nothing more than he said he was going to set timber.

Q. Where?

A. On the entry.

Q. On the entry of this room that had been drawn off at this time?

A. Beyond the entry, where the hill seam went across.

Q. How did this hill seam run with reference to this room neck?

A. I think it run kinder anglin into the neck.

Q. Martin was there on that morning before you had moved all the coal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you call his attention to the hill seam?

A. No, sir; it was plain for everybody to see.

Q. He said that he was going to have timber put there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say for what purpose?

A. Across that hill seam in the entry.

Q. What did he say about it being needed?

A. Just said he was going to put it there.

Q. Did he say why?

A. No, sir; because I knowed what he was going to put it there for.

Q. What was the reason he was going to put that timber there?

A. To keep slate from falling.

Q. Did he know who had been cutting in that place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know?

A. He saw Smith waiting for another place to cut before he came down there.

Q. How do you know?

A. He said he did.

Q. How did you know that Mr. Martin knew that Mr. Smith was working on that entry?

A. Every bank boss knows exactly where his machine men are at work.

Q. Did he understand that Smith would be back there to work when you got that coal moved that morning?

A. Yes, sir.

That the loaders knew of this defect, see the quotations from other testimony.

The statement in the opinion that "Smith had cut in some 8 or 10 feet and the coal had been taken out" is a mistake; and there is not the slightest testimony in the record supporting it. All the witnesses who spoke upon the subject stated that there had been only one cut made in the room with the machine, and that it would only cut 4½ or 5 feet, and the coal had been taken out of that, preparatory for Smith to make another cut. When he was making the second cut, sitting on his board, about 9 feet in length, facing the coal in the room, and managing his machine, he received his injuries, which shows that he was inevitably sitting near the edge of the entry. The testimony shows that the piece of slate that fell was 6 or more inches thick, 6 or 7 feet long, and 4 or 5 feet wide; that it first gave way in the edge of the entry at the hill seam, and ran to a feather-edge in the room.

The witness Davidson, after describing the board and the machine that Smith was using, and the depth of the first cut, stated that it required two cuts with the machine to undermine the coal in the room, which was 10 or more feet wide, and continued as follows:

Q. Now, after he has made these cuts and there is a hill seam across the entry, running to that neck, is there any trouble about the bank boss timbering that to make it safe?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the usual and proper way to make it safe, to timber it? (Defendants object. Objections sustained.)

Q. If the hill seam ran clear across, would it not tend to strengthen it?

A. Yes; it would have saved the entry.

Q. It would have prevented the slate from starting to break in the entry and running on down in the neck?

A. Yes.

The court concludes its opinion by saying in effect, that it appeared from the evidence that it was the duty of Smith to call for props when he needed them, and, having failed to do so, he could not recover. It is true the testimony shows that, when any employee in the progress of his work, discovered any dangerous place, it was his duty to make it known, and have it made safe, or do it himself. This is a self-evident proposition; but in this case there was no evidence whatever that Smith discovered these defects, or had any information with reference thereto. At least two of the witnesses of the seven testified that they had no knowledge of these defects prior to the falling of the slate, but it is shown that the bank boss, Martin, at least, knew of this hill seam, and regarded it as being dangerous, and said that he was going to have it propped. At the time he made this statement, he knew he had marked out this dangerous place for Smith to cut a room, and knew that Smith was then waiting for the room to be prepared for him to make another cut; but, notwithstanding this knowledge on his part, he not only suffered and permitted, but in effect ordered, Smith to continue to work before it was propped, and without giving him warning of the danger. But, suppose the proof does show that Smith saw the hill seam, it is not decisive of the fact that he knew the danger and risk incident thereto, and that he was assuming in working thereunder. The proof only shows that he had been working in the mine as a machine man for about twelve or eighteen months. There is not a scintilla of evidence that he had ever been engaged to remove slate or to prop rooms or entries to make them safe. In view of these facts, the following quotation from Ashland Coal & I. R. Co v. Wallace, 101 Ky. 640, 42 S. W. 747, 43 S. W. 207, is in point, to wit: "Defects in the roof of a mine which might be perfectly apparent to the eye of a competent inspector might have no significance to a laborer or an employee who had had no experience in this special employment; and it would be unreasonable to charge him with contributory negligence simply because he sees defects, unless a reasonably intelligent and prudent man would, under like circumstances, have known or apprehended the risks which those defects indicated. The dangers, and not the defects alone, must be so obvious that a reasonably prudent man would have avoided them, in order to charge the servant with contributory negligence." Appellee's position in this case, which is in effect sustained by the opinion of the court, is that every laborer in its mine must look out for himself; that he must stop his work, investigate the conditions of his surroundings, and, if he finds dangerous places, he must make them safe. To do this would require a loss of time to each hand of thirty or more minutes a day; and would of necessity require that every man, upon entering a mine, be an experienced miner. However, this is not true, unless there be a special contract to that effect. It would change all rules of law with reference to the subject, and would involve the coal companies in such a loss that they could not survive any length of time. In addition to this, employees should not be required to bear this loss of time, unless there is a special contract to do so. As this action was brought under the provisions of the Constitution and statutes, it was not required of appellant to allege and prove that Smith did not know of the defects in the roof and the dangers incident thereto; but it devolved upon appellee to allege and prove that he did know, not only of the defects, but also of the dangers likely to result therefrom.

In the case of Lexington & C. County Min. Co. v. Stephens, 104 Ky. 508, 47 S. W. 323, the court, after discussing the principle applicable to an action brought for personal injuries when death did not ensue, said: "But it must also be remembered that a recovery in such cases is authorized by the common law, and that at common law no recovery can be had for injuries resulting in the immediate death of the person injured. The right to recover in case of death is authorized by the Constitution and statutes enacted by the legislature, which give an absolute right to recover where death ensues from the negligence or wrongful act of the defendant, and it will be observed that the statute makes no reference to the knowledge or contributory negligence of the decedent; and, while it may be true that the administrator or heir would not be allowed to recover in a case where the decedent had knowledge of the danger or risk he was about to incur, yet such negligence is matter of defense, and, to be made available, must be pleaded and proved by the defendant. Any other construction of the law would, in effect, make it a dead letter, for the reason that, the injured party being dead, it would be impossible to prove that he was not aware of the danger, or that he could not, with reasonable diligence, have ascertained the danger." I have shown from the record that appellee's mine in which Smith was employed to labor was defective and dangerous; that he lost his life by reason thereof; that it was the duty of appellant to make the place where Smith was injured reasonably safe, and to use ordinary care to keep it so; that it was not the duty of Smith to do this, but this duty was assigned to the bank boss and the loaders, and they utterly failed to perform their duty in this respect.

The only question left is as to the contributory negligence of Smith. There is no proof that he was negligent, except a few of the witnesses assume that he knew of the defects in the roof, because, in their opinion, the defects were patent. There was not the slightest intimation that Smith had any experience or knowledge in examining the roof of mines for the purpose of ascertaining defects and securing them with props. He was an experienced machine man. The question of the contributory negligence of Smith, barring a recovery, should unquestionably have been submitted to the jury, and the court erred in refusing to do this. The case of Ashland Coal & I. R. Co. v. Wallace, supra, was one where the facts were very similar to the case at bar. It appears that in that case the person injured was an experienced miner, and was, at the time of his injuries, laying track in an entry of the mine. In that case the court said: "In actions like this, questions of negligence are for the jury to determine. The ordinary care which parties are required to use in the discharge of their respective duties varies so much with the situation of the parties and the circumstances of each particular case that the policy of the law to relegate these questions to juries has been long settled. The application of these rules of law to this case clearly authorizes its submission to the jury. The testimony does not present a record where all reasonable men must draw the inference either that the plaintiff was guilty of, or that the defendant was free from, negligence. The testimony is conflicting. It is probable that, if the mine owner in this case had sent an experienced, suitable, and competent person after the removal of the coal by Harris on Saturday evening, to inspect the roof of this entry at that place, the defects would have been discovered and remedied; and as to the contributory negligence of decedent which is complained of, in view of the fact that he was primarily employed as a track layer by the day,—at $1 a day,—and it not being his special duty to see after the safety of the roof of the entry, we think he had a right to presume that the defendant had inspected and knew the roof from which this coal had been so recently removed to be reasonably safe. This work was performed in dark passages in the earth, with no light to guide decedent except the flickering rays of the small lamp in his hat, which rendered it specially difficult for him to have noted other than obvious defects." See also the cases of Crabtree Coal Min. Co. v. Sample, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1703, 72 S. W. 24, and McFarland v. Harbison & W. Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 746, 82 S. W. 430.

In view of the facts stated and the authorities cited, I am compelled to dissent from the opinion of the court, delivered in this case.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Hobson, J., on December 17, 1909, handed down the following response:

When this case was pending before us on appeal, the transcript was read by five of the seven judges, and the case most thoroughly discussed on several occasions in consultation before the opinion was rendered, after which a majority of the court reached the conclusion that the judgment awarding a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the defendant should be affirmed.

On the petition for a rehearing, the transcript has been re-read by two of the judges, and all of the material parts of the evidence read in consultation to the whole court, and we have again thoroughly discussed and considered the question involved, and we still think the original opinion contains a correct exposition of the law governing the case, under all the facts, as shown in the transcript.
28 L.R.A. (N.S.).

The petition for rehearing is therefore overruled.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The Index to Cases follows this.)

Accommodation paper. See BILLS AND NOTES.		Reversal for refusal to grant new trial	133
Accounting. Right of policy holder to an accounting by insurer	559	Miscellaneous	134
Action or suit. When action based on service by publication deemed commenced for purpose of statute of limitations	702	Right to review of order granting or denying motion for inspection of books or papers, apart from an appeal from final judgment	516
Right of one whose property has been taken for public use without condemnation proceedings to maintain action for compensation, or for permanent damages	968	Arbitration. As condition precedent to action on insurance policy	104
Ademption. Of legacy, see WILLS.		Arrest. Liability of master for arrest or false imprisonment by servant employed as detective, policeman, or watchman	88
Admiralty. Right to interest on unliquidated damages	7, 80	Assault. Internal hemorrhage as evidence of statutory wounding	965
Admission. Conclusiveness of judicial admission as to strangers	327	Assessments. For public improvements, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Alienation. Restraint on, as repugnant to fee, see WILLS.		Assignment. Constitutionality of statute restricting right to assign salary or wages	1108
Alimony. See DIVORCE.		Assumpsit. Right of executor or administrator to recover back from creditor excessive payments made under the mistaken belief that estate was insolvent	440
Animals. See also HORSES. Power of municipal corporation to prevent stock yards within corporate limits	122	Right of one whose property has been taken for public use without his consent and without condemnation proceedings to maintain action for compensation	968
Liability of railroad company for attracting animals running at large to its premises by allowing freight or waste to remain exposed thereon	83	Right of one who pays invalid tax in order to obtain discount, to recover amount paid	1045
Right to kill dogs	673	Assumption of risk. See MASTER AND SERVANT.
Appeal and error. Review by appellate court of ruling of the trial court on motion to grant a new trial in action for bodily injuries on ground of inadequacy of damages awarded	130	Attorneys. Right of attorney to purchase subject-matter of litigation or retainer from client and his duty in relation thereto	723
Affirming order granting new trial	131	Attorneys' fees. As part of compensatory damages recoverable in an action for tort	761
Affirming decision of lower court refusing new trial	131	Validity of statutory provision for, in proceedings involving collection of taxes or special assessments	1062
Reversing order of trial court granting a new trial	133		1277

Attractive nuisance.

- Liability of railroad company for attracting animals running at large to its premises by allowing freight or waste to remain exposed thereon 83

Automobiles.

- Liability for collision of automobile with bicyclist 944

Bailment.

- Liability of bailee for interest 6
Liability of hirer for injury to horse while being used for a purpose other than that for which it was hired 1106

Bankruptcy.

- Is state court's jurisdiction of creditor's attack on preference ousted by bankruptcy proceedings commenced more than four months after preference 363
Promise to pay a fixed sum conditional upon exercise of an option by promisee, the time for which had not expired at the time of bankruptcy, as basis of provable claim 349
Does the fact that a bank has, by an agreement invalid as against the trustee in bankruptcy, undertaken to hold the bankrupt's deposit as a fund for creditors, prevent it from setting off deposit against its own claim 484
When will discharge of principal in bankruptcy release surety on a bond given by the principal in an action at law 234
Fraud in preventing collection of claim as excepting it from discharge in bankruptcy 423

Banks.

- Power of bank officer to bind bank by agreement varying the liability of parties to commercial paper from that imported on its face 511
Power of bank officer to bind bank by agreement that liability of party to commercial paper shall not be enforced 501
Agreement that no liability will be incurred 501
Agreement to release a party to a note from existing liability 502
Admissibility of parol evidence to prove the agreement 503
Right of bank to set off its own claim against a deposit which by an agreement invalid as against the trustee in bankruptcy it had undertaken to hold as a fund for creditors 484

Bicycle.

- Liability for collision of automobile with bicyclist 944

Bills and notes.

- Implied or apparent authority of agent to take note payable to himself 341
Relief from mistake of law as to effect of 830

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

- Effect of fraudulent reissue of bill or note which has been paid 1066
Rights inter se of accommodation parties to commercial paper 1039
Accommodation parties as cosureties 1042
Distinction between notes and bills of exchange 1044
Where indorser receives portion of the proceeds 1044
Change in order of names on paper given in renewal 1044
Where each party has paid a portion of the money 1044
Knowledge that paper was accommodation paper 1044
Effect of statute of frauds 1045
Admissibility of parol evidence 1045
Breach of parol warranty as defense to an action between original parties on note for purchase price of chattel 267
Admissibility of parol evidence, as between indorser and indorsee, that unrestricted indorsement was made merely to transfer title to the owner 530

Bills of exchange.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

Bona fide purchaser.

- Who are bona fide purchasers against whom reformation cannot be had 910

Bonds.

- Right to interest on official bonds 11
Relief from mistake of law as to effect of 804, 828
Liability of public officer to sureties of another public officer for loss sustained by them through former's neglect to require proper settlement of accounts 115
Effect upon bond conditioned for fidelity of employee or agent, of a change in the latter's field of operation or the nature of his duties 403

Bridge.

- Applicability, as between master and servant, of maxim Res ipsa loquitur, to fall of bridge 591
Liability for damming back water of stream by bridge 156
Duty to light highway bridge 946

Brokers.

- Right of principal to recover from broker or other agent commissions which latter received from other party to the contract 952

Building restrictions.

See COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Cancellation of instruments.

- Mistake of law as to effect of instrument as ground of 785

Carriers.

- As to matters affecting interstate commerce, see COMMERCE.

Right to interest on claim against common carriers	17,	82	Law governing validity of marriage	758
Rights of one going to station to deposit baggage		811	Action to recover instalments of alimony accruing under a decree rendered in another state	1068
Duty to traveler on wrong train through his own mistake		611	Prosecution for receiving stolen property, where property was stolen in foreign state or country	750
Duty of carrier to one who goes upon a train to assist a passenger		773
Action of public authorities under police power as defense to carrier for delay or nondelivery of freight		139	Consideration.
Effect of shipping contract limiting carrier's common-law liability, signed under compulsion		637	See CONTRACTS.
Effect of limitation of liability in receipt prepared by shipper		645	Constitutional law.
Power to compel railroad to build, maintain, or connect with, side tracks for accommodation of shippers		1013	Validity of statutory provision for attorneys' fees in proceedings involving collections of taxes or special assessments	1062
			Constitutionality of assessment for improvements by front-foot rule	1135
Clergymen.			Power to compel railroad to build, maintain, or connect with sidetracks for accommodation of shippers	1013
What words uttered concerning clergyman are actionable per se		152	Constitutionality of statute restricting right to assign salary or wages	1108
Club.
Jurisdiction of equity, on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits, to enforce liability of members of a club or corporation		743	Contracts.
			Of employment, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Collision.			Relief from mistake of law as to effect of contract	837
Right to interest on unliquidated damages	7,	80	Right of action for damages for inducing breach of contract	615
			Promise of additional compensation for completing an executory contract other than for the payment of money	450
Commerce.			Statute of frauds as affecting accommodation indorser	1045
Does transportation between points in same state over a route part of which is in another state constitute interstate commerce		985	Statute of frauds as affecting parol variation of instrument	876
Railroad companies		985	Written authority to agent to contract for sale of property as dispensing with necessity that contract of sale itself be in writing	738
Telegraph companies		987	Who must sign note or memorandum of executory contract for the sale of real property or chattels within the statute of frauds	680
High seas and navigable waters		988	Not necessary that both parties sign	681
Validity of stipulation limiting carrier's liability to agreed valuation as affected by the Hepburn Act		293	View that "party to be charged" is the party sought to be charged in the suit	689
Power of state court to pass upon interstate rates		108	View that "party to be charged" is the vendor or owner, as such	691
License or occupation tax on hawkers and peddlers, and persons engaged in soliciting orders by sample or otherwise, as a violation of the commerce clause		265	Statutes not employing the phrase, "party to be charged"	692
Discrimination against manufactures or products of other states		265	Who may enforce contract	694
Validity as an exercise of police power		265	Vendor who did not sign against vendee who did	694
Interstate character of transaction as affected by delivery through agent		265	Contracts as to real property	694
As affected by shipment in bulk to agent		265	Contracts for sale of goods	695
Sale of picture frame as incidental to transaction protected by commerce clause		266	Vendee who did not sign against vendor who did	696
			Contracts as to real property	696
Compromise and settlement.			Contracts for sale of goods	698
Authority of pledgee to compromise obligations held as collateral security		980	Vendor who did sign against vendee who did not	699
Relief from mistake as to		841	Contracts as to real property	699
Conflict of laws.
Law governing liability of telegraph company		490

Contracts for sale of goods	701	Change due to other causes	715
Vendee who did sign against vendor who did not	701	In general	715
Right to interest on unliquidated damages for breach of contract	24, 82	Under what circumstances a bar	716
Validity of contract to furnish a patient medical services for life.	1112	Under what circumstances not a bar	718
Is promise by a third party to pay claim arising out of performance of contract between two other persons tainted by the illegality of that contract	996	Generally	718
		Where restriction still beneficial	719
Corporations.		Criminal law.
See also BANKS.		See also HOMICIDE; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; LARCENY; SEARCH WARRANT; WOUNDING.
As to corporate taxation, see TAXES.		Conclusiveness of plea of guilty in subsequent civil action	323
Jurisdiction of equity, on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits, to enforce liability of members of a club or corporation	743	Damages.
Right of infant to rescind purchase of corporate stock	128	Right to interest on unliquidated damages	1
Liability of officers or promoters to one who purchases stock from an individual in reliance on a prospectus issued to induce purchase of treasury stock	350	Interference with access to highway from the part of parcel not taken by the taking of another part as element of damages in condemnation	385
		Counsel fees and other expenses of bringing suit as part of compensatory damages recoverable in an action for tort	761
Corpus delicti.		Measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of, trees or shrubbery not valuable for their timber or firewood	757
See LARCENY.		Death.
Costs and fees.		As to presumption of, see EVIDENCE.
Attorney's fees as part of compensatory damages recoverable in action for tort	761	Effect of deed to a deceased person	405
		Right to interest on damages for	72
Counties.		Debt limit.
Power of legislature to authorize counties to build, purchase, or operate railroad as affected by restrictions on power to aid private enterprises	412	See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
Courts.		Deeds.
See also BANKRUPTCY; EQUITY.		As to tax deed, see TAXES.
Power of state court to pass on interstate rates	108	Relief from mistake of law as to effect of	801, 813
		Effect of deed to a deceased person	405
Covenants and conditions.		Effect of one spouse joining in the execution of the other's deed or mortgage, to convey the former's separate property included therein	239
Right to enforcement of restrictive covenant as affected by change in neighborhood	706	Validity of limitation upon power of alienation imposed upon grant or devise of equitable estate to married woman	426
Inapplicability of doctrine in law	707	Demand.
Change due to act or default of complainant or his predecessor	707	As a condition of action to recover money collected by an agent	626
In general	707	As a condition of right to reformation for mistake of law as to effect of instrument	913
Failure to carry out scheme	709	Dismissal and discontinuance.
In general	709	See EMINENT DOMAIN.
What amounts to	709	Divorce.
What does not amount to	709	Action to recover instalments of alimony accruing under a decree rendered in another state	1063
Acquiescence in violations of restriction	710	Character of residence essential to give jurisdiction in divorce proceedings	992
Generally	710	Dogs.
As affected by materiality of violation	711	See ANIMALS.
Where other violations not injurious to complainant	712
Under what circumstances a bar	712
Under what circumstances not a bar	713

Domicil and residence.

Character of, essential to give jurisdiction in divorce proceedings 992

Double tax.

See TAXES.

Duress.

Right of one who pays invalid tax for purpose of obtaining discount, to recover amount paid 1045

Effect of shipping contract limiting carrier's common law liability signed under compulsion 637

Easements.

Right of purchaser of property according to plat to easements in streets or ways indicated thereon, other than those on which his property abuts 1024 Election.

See WILLS.

Effect of loss or destruction of registry lists 989

Does marking some but not all of the candidates on a party ticket defeat the effect of marking under the party emblem as a vote for the omitted candidates, where no votes were cast for their opponents 461

Electricity.

Liability of physician for injuries resulting from electrical or X-ray treatment 262

Liability of electric railway for injury to trespasser or licensee from exposed third rail 98

Eminent domain.

As to measure of damages in, see DAMAGES.

Right of condemning party to dismiss condemnation proceedings after award or verdict and before confirmation or judgment 91

Right of one whose property has been taken for public use without his consent and without condemnation proceedings, to maintain action for compensation or for permanent damages 968

Legal remedies 968

Equitable remedies 973

Statutory remedy as exclusive of action for compensation or permanent damages 974

Equity.

Relief from mistake of law as to effect of instrument 785

General rules 788

Statement of and application generally 788

Principles on which relief is granted 791

Mistake of law defined 792

For what mistakes relief may be had 792

Generally 792

Rule that ignorance or mistake of law does not excuse 796

General statement of 796

Construction of instrument 799

Mistake or ignorance as to legal consequences 799

Rule that mistake of law may be cause for reformation 803

Generally 808

Mistake resulting in failure to carry out intention 811

Application to particular cases 813

Mistake as to one's own legal rights, interests, or relations 840

Mistake as to legal rights, as affecting compromises and settlements 841

Mutuality, as affecting ignorance or mistake of law 844

General rules 844

Application in particular cases 847

Mistake superinduced or accompanied by fraud or inequitable conduct 851

General rules 851

Fraud 853

Inequitable conduct 858

Effect of character of the act or instrument on reformability 864

Void acts or instruments 864

Voluntary acts or instruments 867

Wills 870

Contracts with reference to homesteads 872

Contracts of married women 873

Statutes of frauds as affecting parol variation 876

The general rule 876

Rule that mistake and fraud create admissibility 877

Generally 877

Application to particular cases 879

Rule permitting taking from but not adding to contract 879

Generally 879

Application to particular cases 881

Collateral oral contracts 882

Effect of negligence accompanying mistake 882

General rules 882

Necessity that negligence be detrimental to other party 883

Ability to ascertain real facts 884

Obligation to disclose 886

Delay in seeking relief 887

Generally 887

Application to insurance contracts 890

Executed contracts	202	Liability of abutting property owner for injury caused by ice formed from water artificially turned across sidewalk	200
False statement is made with knowledge of its falsity, or without regard to its truth or falsity	202	Power of municipality to permit abutting owners to extend structures into street	375
False statements honestly or mistakenly made	204	Preventive remedy of nonconsenting abutting property owner where use of highway for street railway is authorized by public	1082
Where fraudulent representation is made by a person without interest	206	Does the fact that one is prevented by an unlawful obstruction from using a highway cause him a special damage which will sustain an action by him against the wrongdoer	1053
Expression of opinion	206	Liability of public service company for frightening horses by construction apparatus in street	942
Silence as to, or concealment of, defects in title	207
Executory contracts	208	Homestead.
Necessity of exercising diligence to discover truth of representation	209	Effect of mistake of law as to contract with reference to homestead as ground of reformation	872
As affected by the nature of the conveyance	211
Necessity that injury result	212	Homicide.
Effect of vendee retaining possession	212	As affected by negligence or lack of skill in treatment or care of wound	665
Effect of fraudulent reissue of bill or note which has been paid	1066	Death inflicted while defendant is violating a municipal ordinance	770
Right to interest on damages for fraud or deceit	50
Is action based on fraud governed by statute of limitations applicable to injury to property or injury to person	353	Horses.
Relief from mistake of law, accompanied by fraud, as to effect of instrument	853	Liability of public service corporation for frightening horses by construction apparatus in street	942
		Liability of hirer for injury to horse while being used for a purpose other than that for which it was hired	1106
Fraudulent conveyances.		Husband and wife.
Is failure to take immediate possession upon sale of chattels cured by taking possession before attachment of the particular right or lien of the person attacking the sale	214	Validity of limitation upon power of alienation imposed upon grant or devise of equitable estate to married woman	426
		Effect of mistake of law as to contract of married woman as ground of reformation	873
Front-foot rule.		Effect of one spouse joining in the execution of the other's deed or mortgage, to convey the former's separate property included therein	289
Assessments for public improvements by the front-foot rule	1124	Ice.
		See HIGHWAYS.
Funeral expenses.		Incompetent persons.
Items and amounts allowable as funeral expenses against deceased's estate	572	Power of guardian or conservator to adeem legacy	401
Guardian and ward.		Infants.
Power of guardian or conservator to adeem legacy	401	Right of infant to rescind purchase of corporate stock	128
Health.		Initials.
Action of public authorities under police power as defense to carrier for delay or nondelivery of freight	130	Use of initials instead of Christian name in publication of process	436
Highways.		Injunction.
As to automobiles, see AUTOMOBILES.		Right to interest on injunction bond 14,	82
Right of purchaser of property according to plat to easements in streets or ways indicated thereon other than those on which his property abuts	1024	Right of nonconsenting abutting owner to injunction against use of highway for street railway authorized by public	1082
Duty to light highway bridge	940
Right to interest on damages from change of grade	60
Power to compel railroad to establish or maintain at its own expense overhead or underground crossing, as affected by the fact that the street or highway was opened subsequently to construction of the railroad	298

Interference with one's use of highway as a special damage which will sustain an action by him against the wrongdoer	1053	Nondelivery	46
Mistake of law as to effect of instrument as ground of	785	Refusing to accept	48
Right of members of organization to protection in use of name which their efforts have made valuable	458	Warranty, deceit, and fraud	49
Innkeepers.		Fraud and deceit	50
Duty of innkeeper as to effects of one who has left without intention of returning as guest	495	Eminent domain	51
Insurance.		Generally	51
Relief from mistake of law as to effect of insurance policy	831	Pennsylvania cases	51
Right of policy holder to an accounting by insurer	559	New York cases	53
Liability for death under policy insuring against permanent or total disability	742	Possession by owner	61
Liability to indemnify against total disability which results from an injury for which an independent indemnity is provided	730	Tender or deposit of money	63
Furnishing proofs of loss not under oath as substantial compliance with policy requiring proofs under oath	651	Other cases	64
Effect of temporary condition which ceased before loss, under general provision against increase of risk, or specific provision against certain conditions	593	Highway,—change of grade	66
Loss or destruction of books, inventory, etc., as excusing their production as required by policy	337	Negligence	66
Arbitration as condition precedent to action on insurance policy	104	Damages from fire	66
Interest.		Injury to stock	68
As to usury, see USURY.		Personal injuries and death	70
Right to interest on unliquidated damages	1	Personal injuries	70
Work and labor	1	Death	72
Bailment	6	Defective highways	73
Admiralty and collision	7	Other injuries	73
Bonds and undertakings	11	Nuisance	74
Official bonds	11	Penal actions	74
Replevin bonds	12	Infringement of patents	75
Injunction bonds	14	Water and water courses	76
Other bonds	16	Splitting actions	78
Actions against a common carrier	17	Other actions	78
Generally	17	English cases	79
Loss of goods	18	Eminent domain	79
Damage to goods and stock	19	Admiralty and collision	80
Delay in delivering	20	Trover and conversion	81
Illinois cases	21	Common carrier	82
Missouri cases	22	Contract	82
Tennessee cases	22	Negligence	82
Texas cases	22	Injunction	82
Ejection of passenger	24	Waste	82
Contracts	24	Interstate commerce.
Trover and conversion	28	See COMMERCE.
Generally	28	Intoxicating liquor.
Wrongful levy	36	Mandamus to compel public officials to enforce the liquor law	246
Trespass	38	Is one who obtains liquor for and delivers it to another, using the latter's money, guilty of selling the same	334
Personal property	38	Judgments.
Realty	39	Action to recover instalments of alimony accruing under a decree rendered in another state	1068
Replevin	42	Judicial sale.
Sale	46	Right of purchaser of land at judicial sale to abatement of purchase price for deficiency in quantity	393
		Landlord and tenant.
		As to oil and gas leases, see MINES.
		Relief from mistake of law as to effect of lease	836
		Larceny.
		See also RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY.
		Proof of corpus delicti in larceny	536
		What constitutes	536
		Necessity of proving	536
		In connection with confession	536
		Character and sufficiency	537
		Evidence of corpus delicti tending to connect accused	538
		Lease.
		See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Libel and slander.
Applying vile epithets to man	85
What words uttered concerning clergyman are actionable per se	152
Necessity that the plea of justification or privilege correspond to the words imputed to the defendant by the complaint	551
License.
As affected by interstate commerce, see COMMERCE.
Lien.
See also MORTGAGES.
Agreement for support in consideration of conveyance, as basis for equitable lien	607
Life contract.
Validity of contract to furnish a patient medical services for life	1112
Life tenancy.
As to quantum of estate under a devise, see WILLS.
Limitation of actions.
Demand as a condition of action to recover money collected by an agent	626
When action based on service by publication deemed commenced	702
Is action based on fraud governed by statute applicable to injury to property, or injury to the person	853
Effect of payment or acknowledgment by mortgagor to toll statute as against his grantee or other person holding interest in property through him	169
Effect of running of limitation since original assessment for local improvement upon a reassessment ordered because of invalidity of original	735
Live stock.
See RAILROADS.
Local improvements.
See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Location.
Of mining claim, see MINES.
Logs.
See WATERS.
Malice.
Right of action for inducing breach of contract	615
Malicious prosecution.
Right of one in possession without title to maintain an action for malicious prosecution for seizure of property in an action against him	330
Mandamus.
To compel public officials to enforce the liquor law	246
To compel exercise of the power to remove or suspend public officer	194
Manufacturers.
See NEGLIGENCE.
Marriage.
As to divorce, see DIVORCE.
Law governing validity of	753
Master and servant.
Bond of employee, see BONDS.
Constitutionality of statute restricting right to assign salary or wages	1108
Right of wrongfully discharged servant to recover wages for contract period subsequent to discharge	577
Right of servant to compensation in case of incomplete performance of his contract caused by physical disability	815
Performance permanently interrupted by reason of the physical disability of the servant	815
In general	815
Abandonment by servant	815
Dismissal by master	318
Servant released from engagement	318
Doctrine of the maritime law	318
Performance temporarily interrupted by reason of the physical disability of the servant	319
Doctrine of common-law courts	319
Servant's rights in respect of work actually done	319
Servant's rights in respect of the period during which he was disabled	319
Servant not bound to make up for lost time	322
Servant's rights as affected by specific stipulations	322
Effect of specific statutory provisions	323
Doctrine in civil-law jurisdictions	823
Scotland	823
Louisiana	824
Quebec	824
Effect of physical disability considered with reference to circumstances importing fault on the servant's part	325
Disability anticipated when contract was made	325
Disability caused by injury sustained by reason of the servant's own negligence	325
Duty of servant to resume work after removal of his disability	325
Master's right of recoupment for damage caused by servant's death or disability	326
Liability of master for arrest or false imprisonment by servant employed as detective, policeman, or watchman	88
Applicability of rule as to safe place where the conditions of work are changing	1266
Service by mail of notice required by employers' liability acts	288
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

- Liability of master for injuries due to the explosion of dynamite by lighting 1260
- Applicability of maxim Res ipsa loquitur to fall of bridge 591
- Applicability of maxim Res ipsa loquitur to fall of scaffold 586
- May servant assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence 1215
- Necessity of negligence on part of master to permit recovery 1216
- Distinction between ordinary and extraordinary risks 1218
- Assumption of ordinary risks 1219
- Assumption of extraordinary risks 1220
- The two senses in which the term is used 1221
- Knowledge as an element of assumption of extraordinary risks 1222
- Apparently contrary statements as affected by the facts of the case 1225
- Basis of assumption of risk of master's negligence 1228
- Apparent modification of the general rule in some states 1231
- Illinois 1231
- Michigan 1232
- Utah 1233
- West Virginia 1234
- Wisconsin 1234
- The Missouri doctrine 1234
- The North Carolina rule 1240
- Statutes abolishing or abrogating assumption of risk 1242
- Servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servant 1250
- Test in Federal court 1251
- Test in Arkansas 1252
- Test in Minnesota 1252
- Test in Texas 1253
- Miscellaneous tests 1254
- Assumption by train employee of risks due to defects in tracks or roadbed 1255
- Mines.
- Is lessor entitled to declare forfeiture of oil and gas lease for failure of the lessee to market product after completing well 959
- Effect of excessive location of mining claim 1020
- Mistake.
- Relief from mistake of law as to effect of instrument 785
- Money had and received.
- See ASSUMPSIT.
- Mortgage.
- Relief from mistake of law as to effect of 823
- Effect of one spouse joining in the execution of the other's deed or mortgage to convey the former's separate property included therein 289
- Effect of payment or acknowledgement by mortgagor to toll statute of limitations as against his grantee or other person holding interest in property through him 169
- Effect of tender after maturity but before foreclosure to discharge lien of mortgage 998
- Municipal corporations.
- As to powers and liability in respect of streets or highways, see HIGHWAYS.
- Power of legislature to authorize counties or other political divisions to build, purchase, or operate railroad or street railway, as affected by restrictions on power to aid private enterprises 412
- Death inflicted while violating a municipal ordinance as homicide 770
- Applicability in case of injury to municipal employee of rule requiring notice of defect or notice of injury as condition of municipal liability for personal injury on street or highway 533
- As of what time is the assessed valuation to be taken for purposes of determining the debt limit of a state or municipality 149
- Power of municipal corporation to prevent stock yards within corporate limits 122
- Name.
- See also TRADENAME.
- Use of initials instead of Christian name in publication of process 436
- Negligence.
- See also various specific titles, e. g. CARRIERS; MASTER AND SERVANT; PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.
- As to presumption of negligence, see EVIDENCE.
- As affecting right to relief from mistake of law as to effect of instrument 882
- Right to interest on damages from negligence 66, 82
- Applicability of rule res ipsa loquitur in action for personal injuries from defects in articles manufactured or sold by defendant 949
- Negotiable instruments.
- See BILL AND NOTES.
- New trial.
- Review by appellate court of ruling of trial court on motion to grant a new trial in action for bodily injuries on ground of inadequacy of damages awarded 130
- Notice.
- As condition of municipal liability, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
- Service by mail of notice required by Employer's Liability Acts 233
- 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Nuisance.

- Interference with one's use of a highway as a special damage which will sustain an action by him against the wrongdoer 1053
- Right to interest on recovery for Liability of railroad company for attracting animals running at large to its premises by allowing freight or waste to remain exposed thereon 83
- Power of municipal corporation to prevent stock yards within corporate limits 122

Officers.

- As to bonds of, see BONDS.
- As to election of, see ELECTIONS.
- Mandamus to compel exercise of power to remove or suspend public officer 194

Oil.

- As to oil and gas leases, see MINES.

Option.

- Rights of third person intervening between the taking and exercising of an option for the purchase of real property 522

Parties.

- Interference with one's use of highway as a special damage which will sustain an action by him against the wrongdoer 1053

Partition.

- Right to partition among remaindermen pending life estate 125

Partnership.

- Right of one partner to acquire individual claim against the other 619

Patents.

- Right to interest on damages for infringement 75

Payment.

- Payment to agent as defense to an action by undisclosed principal 230

Peddlers.

- See COMMERCE.

Physicians and surgeons.

- Validity of contract to furnish a patient medical services for life 1112
- Liability of physician or surgeon for failure to diagnose fracture or dislocation 136
- Liability of physician for injuries resulting from electrical or X-ray treatment 262

Plat.

- Right of purchaser of property according to plat to easements in streets or ways indicated thereon other than those on which his property abuts 1024

Pleadings.

- In suit for relief from mistake of law as to effect of instrument 913

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

- Necessity that plea of justification or privilege correspond to the words imputed to the defendant by the complaint in an action for libel 551

Pledge and collateral security.

- Authority of pledgee to compromise obligations held as collateral security 980

Principal and agent.

- Written authority to agent to contract for sale of property as dispensing with necessity that contract of sale itself be in writing 738
- Right of principal to recover from agent commissions which latter received from other party to contract 952
- Implied or apparent authority of agent to take note payable to himself 341
- Right of defendant in action by undisclosed principal to avail himself of defenses that would have been available in an action by the agent in his own right on the contract 227
- Defenses generally 228
- Set-off 229
- Payment to agent 230
- Effect of notice of agency 231
- Demand as a condition of action to recover money collected by an agent 626

Principal and surety.

- See also BONDS.
- When will discharge of principal in bankruptcy release surety on a bond given by the principal in an action at law 234

Process.

- See WRIT AND PROCESS.

Promoters.

- See CORPORATIONS.

Proofs of loss.

- See INSURANCE.

Proximate cause.

- Liability of master for injuries due to explosion of dynamite by lightning 1260

Publication.

- Of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Public improvements.

- May an assessment of benefits rest upon prospective action in completing improvement 669
- Validity of statutory provision for attorneys' fees in proceedings involving collections of taxes or special assessments 1062
- Effect of running of limitation since original assessment upon a reassessment ordered because of invalidity of original 735
- Assessments for improvements by the front-foot rule 1124
- The power to impose special assessments 1126
- In the abstract 1126

The custodian	1127	Failures of the front-foot rule to represent benefits	1191
Nature	1129	Rural lands	1191
The taxing power	1129	Property off the line of improvement	1192
The power of eminent domain	1130	When benefits are utterly ignored	1193
The police power	1132	The front-foot rule as affected by the sort of improvement	1195
Distinction between taxes and assessments	1133	Improvements under the police power	1195
Constitutional limitations of the power of arbitrary assessment	1135	Improvements involving the power of eminent domain	1197
The taxing power	1135	The landowner's right to notice and a hearing	1201
In general	1135	The proper method of assessing according to the front-foot rule	1204
Requirement that taxation shall be equal	1136	Estoppel of landowner	1206
Requirement that taxation shall be uniform	1137
Requirement that taxation shall be both equal and uniform	1138	Public money.
Requirement that taxation shall be ad valorem	1138	Power of legislature to authorize counties or other political divisions to build, purchase, or operate railroad or street railway as affected by restrictions on power to aid private enterprises	412
Requirement that taxation shall be ad valorem and imposed by uniform rule	1139
Requirement that taxation shall be equal, uniform, and ad valorem	1140	Public service corporations.
The Constitutions of Illinois	1141	See also CARRIERS; RAILROADS.
The Constitutions of Alabama	1142	Liability of, for frightening horses by construction apparatus in street	942
Review of Constitutional requirements of equal, uniform, and ad valorem taxation in relation to assessments	1142
The power of eminent domain	1144	Railroads.
The Federal Constitution	1144	As common carriers, see CARRIERS.
Municipal power	1149	As to relation to employees, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Constitutional	1149	Power of legislature to authorize counties or other political divisions to build, purchase, or operate railroad or street railway, as affected by restrictions on power to aid private enterprises	412
Statutory	1150	Liability of railroad company for attracting animals running at large, to its premises, by allowing freight or waste to remain exposed thereon	83
The principles governing the interposition of the courts	1151	Liability for killing or injuring one who went on railroad crossing without knowledge of its existence	382
The necessity for an apportionment	1157	Liability of electric railway for injury to trespasser or licensee from exposed third rail	98
The legislative discretion to prescribe rules of apportionment	1158	Right of one going on railroad crossing to rescue property to recover for injury	346
The binding quality of statutory rules of apportionment	1160	Power to compel railroad to establish or maintain at its own expense overhead or underground crossing, as affected by the fact that the street or highway is opened subsequently to construction of railroad.	298
In general	1160
The front-foot rule	1161	Real Property.
The rule of benefits	1162	See also COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS; DEEDS; WILLS.
The ad valorem rule	1165	Right to partition among remaindermen pending life estate	125
Alternative rules	1166
Effect of omission of legislature to prescribe a rule of apportionment	1166	Receiving stolen property.
Special benefits the justification and foundation of local assessments	1168	Where property in question was stolen in foreign state or country.	750
Assessments that exceed benefits	1172
Equation of benefit and burden to particular pieces of property	1175
The front-foot rule in the abstract	1178
Squaring the front-foot rule with the rule of benefits	1182

Reformation of instruments.

Mistake of law as to effect of instrument as ground of 785

Replevin.

Right to interest on replevin bond 12
Right to interest on value of property taken 42

Rescission.

See CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Residence.

See DOMICIL AND RESIDENCE.

Res ipsa loquitur.

See EVIDENCE.

Salary.

Constitutionality of statute restricting right to assign 1108

Sale.

Validity of, as against creditors, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.
Of intoxicating liquors, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.
As to personal injuries from defects in articles sold, see NEGLIGENCE.
Right to interest on damages for breach of contract 46
Increasing price upon sale on credit as usury 102
Breach of parol warranty as defense to action between original parties on note for purchase price of chattel 267

Scaffold.

Applicability as between master and servant of maxim Res ipsa loquitur to fall of scaffold 586

Seal.

Relief from omission of seal 839

Search warrant.

Search warrant without an affidavit or complaint 548

Set-off and counterclaim.

Right of defendant in action by undisclosed principal to avail himself of set-off against agent 229

Sidetracks.

Power to compel railroad to build, maintain, or connect with sidetracks for accommodation of shippers 1013

Sidewalks.

See HIGHWAYS.

Specific performance.

At instance of party who did not sign, against party who did sign, contract within statute of frauds 694

Statute of frauds.

See CONTRACTS.

Stock yards.

Power of municipal corporation to prevent stock yards within corporate limits 122

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Street railways.

Preventive remedy of nonconsenting abutting owner where use of highway for street railway is authorized by public 1082
Liability of, for frightening horses by construction apparatus in street. 942
Liability of electric railway for injury to trespasser or licensee from exposed third rail 98

Support.

Agreement for support in consideration of conveyance as basis for equitable lien 607

Taxes.

As to assessments for public improvements, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Validity of statutory provision for attorneys' fees in proceedings involving collections of taxes or special assessments 1062
Right of one who pays invalid tax for purpose of obtaining discount to recover amount paid 1045
Right of holder of tax deed to take possession 398
Is property for which no method of taxation is prescribed subject to taxation under a statute declaring that all property not exempt shall be taxed "in the manner provided by this act." 251
Right to be a corporation as a franchise within constitutional or statutory provisions subjecting franchises to taxation as property 255
Does taxation of the business or occupation of a public-service corporation, and the taxation of its franchise or right to occupy the streets, amount to double taxation 221
When is capital of corporation invested in real estate deemed "employed" within statute taxing amount of capital stock employed within state 871

Telegraphs.

Law governing liability of telegraph company 400
Transmission of message between points in same state over a line part of which is in another state as interstate commerce 985
Applicability of stipulation as to repeating telegraph messages to failure or delay in transmission or delivery 566

Telephones.

Liability of telephone company for failure to make connections for subscriber 554

Third rail.

Liability of electric railway for injury to trespasser or licensee from exposed third rail 98

Torts.

Right of action for damages for inducing breach of contract 615

Tradename.		Liability for damming back water of stream by bridge	156
Limitation of right to use one's own name as a tradename	934
Right of members of organization to protection in use of name which their efforts have made valuable	458	Wills.
Trees.		Effect of mistake of law as to effect of will as ground of reformation	870
Measure of damages for injury to or destruction of trees or shrubbery not valuable for timber or firewood	757	Effect of testamentary provision restricting widow to enjoyment during widowhood, upon quantum of estate taken by her	1093
Trespass.		Qualified of determinable fee	1094
Right to interest on damages recoverable in action for	38	Estate during widowhood	1099
Trial.		Validity of limitation upon power of alienation imposed upon grant or devise of equitable estate to married woman	426
Conclusiveness of judicial admission as to strangers	327	As applicable to subsequent coverture	428
Conclusiveness of plea of guilty in subsequent civil action	328	Effect of enabling acts	428
Trover.		May beneficiary be put to his election by extrinsic evidence of testator's intention	637
Right to interest on damages recoverable in	28, 81	Right of persons claiming through deceased relative to participate with those standing in equal degree of relationship with such relative, in provision for "next of kin," etc.	479
Undue influence.		Where instrument contains no other indication of intention	479
See WILLS.		"Next of kin"	480
Usury.		"Nearest of kin"	482
Exacting payment of interest for full term upon payment of debt before maturity	118	"Near" or "nearest relations"	482
Increasing price upon sale on credit as usury	102	Where other language used	482
Vendor and purchaser.		Admissibility of extrinsic evidence to show that instrument, on its face a will, was not intended as such	417
See also JUDICIAL SALE; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.		Power of guardian or conservator to adeem legacy	401
May fraud be predicated of misstatement as to title to real property	202	Evidentiary force of circumstance that one benefited by a will was the draftsman thereof, or was active in procuring its execution	270
Relief from mistake of law as to effect of contract with reference to lands	827	As bearing on question of fraud and deceit	272
Rights of third persons intervening between the taking and the exercise of the option for purchase of real property	522	Application of rule where beneficiary not actual draftsman	273
Tender of deed or abstract of title as condition of enforcing forfeiture for failure of vendee to pay last installment of purchase money	956	Application where draftsman not directly benefited	274
Voters.		Probative force	274
See ELECTIONS.		Effect upon burden of proof	275
Wages.		Circumstances under which proponent required to present additional proof	276
Constitutionality of statute restricting right to assign	1108	Character and sufficiency of proof to repel suspicion of fraud	279
Waste.		Degree	279
Right to interest on damages recoverable for waste	82	Amount	279
Waters.		Kind	279
Right to interest on damages in cases involving water rights	76	Specific instances	280
Relative rights and duties of those using stream for floating logs or maintaining boom, and those navigating vessels thereon	144	As bearing on question of undue influence	281
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)		Preliminary statement	281
		In general	282
		Application of rule where draftsman not directly benefited	282

Probative force of the so-called "presumption" of undue influence	283	Promise of additional compensation for completing an executory contract other than for the payment of money	450
Effect upon burden of proof	284
Circumstances under which proponent must, or should, present additional proof	286	Wounding.
Sufficiency of proof to repel inference or presumption	288	Internal hemorrhage as evidence of statutory wounding	965
Witnesses.		Writ and process.
Competency of original debtor to testify to payment made to decedent, in action by third person against the estate to recover amount so paid	388	When action based on service by publication deemed commenced for purpose of statute of limitations	702
		Use of initials instead of Christian name in publication of process	436
Work and labor.		X-ray.
Right to interest on demand for	1	Liability of physician for injuries resulting from electrical or X-ray treatment	262
28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

GENERAL INDEX

NOTES ARE INDEXED BY THE WORD "ANNOTATED" AFTER THE PARAGRAPHS TO WHICH THEY APPLY.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

By husband, see Constitutional Law, 1.

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

Of price on judicial sale because of deficiency of quantity, see Judicial Sale, 2.

ABSENCE.

Presumption of death from, see Evidence, 7-9.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

Right to complain of construction of subway in street, see Highways, 3.

ACCEPTANCE.

Effect of acceptance of option contract, see Contracts, 6, 9.

ACCESS.

Cutting off of access to highway as element of damages in eminent domain case, see Damages, 6.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

1. The drawing of money on a warrant given in full payment for the construction of a bridge for a city, by a bank with whom it had been deposited under an agreement between it and the builder, whereby the bank was to furnish money for the construction, and all warrants therefor were to be made payable to it, without the consent or knowledge of the builder and after it had been notified that the warrant must not be accepted in full payment because a dispute had arisen as to the amount due, and a larger sum was claimed than that for which the warrant was drawn, does not operate as an accord and satisfaction of the amount claimed by the builder, so as to preclude his recovering that amount from the city. Matheney v. Eldorado, 28: 980, 109 Pac. 166, 82 Kan. 720.

2. A bank which holds a warrant issued to it by a municipal corporation under an agreement between the bank and a contractor, whereby the bank was to furnish the contractor money for the construction of a bridge for the city, as security for which all warrants and payment therefor were to be issued to the bank, has no authority, by reason of such agreement, to compromise a dispute between the contractor and the city as to the amount due the former, by accepting the warrant against the express direction of the contractor, where it purports to be in full payment and is for a less amount than that claimed by the creditor to be due him, so as to work an accord and satisfaction between the contractor and the city. Matheney v. Eldorado, 28: 980, 109 Pac. 166, 82 Kan. 720.

ACCOUNTING.

Suit for, by holder of tontine policy, see also Parties, 4; Pleading, 3.
Between partners, see Partnership.

The holder of a tontine life insurance policy is entitled, upon its maturity, to an accounting by the insurer of the amount due upon it. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Winn, 28: 558, 126 S. W. 153, — Ky. — (Annotated)

ACQUIESCENCE.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 2.

ACTION OR SUIT.

Error in entertaining motion to strike out separate defense, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Error in failing to dismiss suit for misjoinder of, see Appeal and Error, 24.

Appearance in, see Appearance.

Dismissal of, see Dismissal and Discontinuance.

Joinder of, to prevent multiplicity of suits, see Equity, 3, 4.

Burden of establishing defenses, see Evidence, 2.

Arbitration as condition precedent to suit on insurance policy, see Insurance, 8.

Effect of, on running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 6-9.

Notice to master as condition precedent to right of action by injured servant, see Master and Servant, 2. 3

Striking out immaterial defense, see Pleading, 3.

Demand.

1. No demand is necessary before institution of a suit to recover money collected by defendant for plaintiff. Young v. Kimber, 28: 626, 98 Pac. 1132, 44 Colo. 448. (Annotated)

Splitting; successive suits.

Action for injury to land by wrongful construction of railway thereon, see Trial, 17.

2. Where a complainant presents in a state court a part of the existing and known facts which it claims entitles it to an order restraining the prosecution of suits upon the same causes of action in two different courts, and fails to secure it, and subsequently presents by another bill in the Federal court the other part of those facts, thereby splitting its cause of action, it exhibits a lack of diligence fatal to the second application. Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City S. R. Co. 28: 620, 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285.

ADEMPTION.

Power of servitor of incompetent to adeem legacies, see Incompetent Persons.

ADJOURNMENT.

See Continuance and Adjournment.

ADMINISTRATION.

See Executors and Administrators.

ADMISSIONS.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 3.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Injunction against adverse user, see Injunction, 4.

As to limitation of actions, see Limitation of Actions.

Interruption of running of limitations in favor of one claiming by, see Limitation of Actions, 6.

1. Title by adverse possession is not established where the proof does not show actual, exclusive, and continuous possession under claim of ownership for the full statutory period. Butler v. Smith, 28: 436, 120 N. W. 1106, 84 Neb. 78.

2. Exclusive possession by the owner of the record title for three years after the execution of a tax deed for the property extinguishes the tax title. Kathan v. Comstock, 28: 201, 122 N. W. 1044, 140 Wis. 427.

AGENCY.

See Principal and Agent.

AID.

To railroads, see Railroads, 1.

ALIENATION.

Restraints upon, see Covenants and Conditions, 2.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ALIMONY.

See Divorce.

ALLEY.

Right of grantee of maker of plat to close alley against protest of other purchasers, see Vendor and Purchaser, 6.

AMENDMENT.

Of record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 3.

Of pleading, see Appeal and Error, 25; Pleading, 2.

Of alternative writ of mandamus, see Mandamus, 6.

AMOUNT.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 1.

ANIMALS.

Liability of bailee of horses for injury to, see Bailment; Evidence, 19, 35.

Fright of horse on highway, see Highways, 5, 7.

Forbidding maintenance of cattle yards in residence district of city, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

Sale of, by agent in excess of authority, see Principal and Agent, 1, 2.

Purchase of stolen animals, see Receiving Stolen Property.

Injury at railroad crossing in attempting to stop runaway horse, see Trial, 20.

1. A railroad company which permits a leaky oil car to stand near where cattle are rightly accustomed to graze along a highway and its unfenced track, so that the oil forms pools, the drinking of which will be injurious to the cattle, is bound to guard the pools, or drive away cattle which it sees drinking the oil. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Newman, 28: 83, 127 S. W. 735, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

2. A constable killing, in obedience to a valid municipal ordinance, a dog running at large without a muzzle, is not subject to punishment under a statute providing a penalty for wilfully killing dogs. State v. Clifton, 28: 673, 67 S. E. 751, 152 N. C. 800. (Annotated)

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Existence of right to appeal as bar to certiorari, see Certiorari.

Finality of decision for purpose of appeal.

1. Appeals from decrees directing members of a social club to pay assessments, disallowing the claim of receivers for special assessments against them, and allowing claims against the assets of the club, will lie without waiting for a final decree distributing its assets. Rogers v. Boston Club, 28: 743, 91 N. E. 321, 205 Mass. 261.

Record on appeal.

2. Error in sustaining an objection to a question which showed on its face the relevancy and materiality of the evidence called for is not available on appeal, where the record fails to show what the answer would have been, or what was proposed to be proved; the test being whether the error complained of was prejudicial, and not whether the evidence was material. Sayre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

3. The omission from the record in a criminal prosecution of any plea and joinder of issue may be cured after a writ of error has been allowed, by certification to the appellate court of a nunc pro tunc order placing upon the record, by way of amendment, the fact that plea had been made before the jury was impaneled and sworn and issue joined. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 295, — W. Va. —.

4. A recital in the defendant's brief on appeal that "the court erred in overruling the motion of the defendant made at the close of the evidence, that the jury be directed to return a verdict for defendant," sufficiently assigns error as to the overruling of a motion to instruct the jury to find in defendant's favor under Neb. Acts 1907, chap. 162. Waxham v. Fink, 28: 367, 125 N. W. 145, 86 Neb. 180.

Objections and exceptions.

5. A verdict not directed can be set aside on motion if from the whole record it is clearly wrong, and it is not necessary, in order to get the case before the reviewing court, to except to the rulings of the trial judge rather than to move to set aside the verdict. Simonds v. Maine Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 28: 942, 72 Atl. 175, 104 Me. 440.

Dismissal.

6. Where a full examination of the merits of an appeal shows that cross appellants are entitled to no relief except that already granted by the trial court, a motion by appellants to dismiss the cross appeal may be disregarded. Hamilton v. Allen, 28: 723, 125 N. W. 610, 86 Neb. 401.

Presumptions.

7. On appeal in a civil action, where the record shows that the jury were sworn, it will be presumed that they were fairly sworn, if the form of oath administered does not appear. First Nat. Bank v. Lowther-Kaufman Oil & C. Co. 28: 511, 66 S. E. 713, 66 W. Va. 505.

8. The bill of exceptions should not be stricken on appeal, on the ground that the prevailing party did not have the statutory period allowed, after notice that a bill of exceptions had been filed, in which to file his objections and amendments thereto, where it does not appear that such right was not waived, as the presumption is that notice was given and that opportunity to inspect and object was had, although the record is silent as to that fact. Kroll v. Close, 28: 571, 92 N. E. 29, 82 Ohio St. 190.

9. Objection that the record does not show that the prisoner was in court when the verdict was rendered cannot be raised 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) on appeal, where there is no evidence that he was not in court at such time, and the record affirmatively shows his presence in court when the jury was impaneled and after the verdict was rendered, since from such facts a presumption of his presence during the intervening period arises. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 205, — W. Va. —.

What reviewable generally.

Condition of record as affecting reviewability, see supra, 2-4.

10. The appellate court will not pass upon the merits of a plea of fraud, which was offered by way of amendment after the striking of a general allegation of fraud because not sufficiently specific, which was wrongfully stricken, as res judicata, as the ruling striking the amendment was not upon the merits. Dolvin v. American Harrow Co. 28: 785, 54 S. E. 706, 125 Ga. 699.

Objections as to which party is estopped.

11. One who asked erroneous instructions which were given cannot complain that they contradicted other instructions which were also given by the court. McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 28: 1244, 104 Pac. 801, 65 Wash. 495.

Review of discretionary matters.

12. The reasonableness of an allowance to the administrator for funeral expenses of the deceased, in the absence of statutory or testamentary provision, may be reviewed on appeal, when the facts are uncontroverted. Kroll v. Close, 28: 571, 92 N. E. 29, 82 Ohio St. 190.

Questions not raised below.

13. A conviction for resisting the execution of a warrant will not be reversed because of absence of direct evidence to show that the place where the attempt at execution was made was within the jurisdiction of the officers issuing and attempting to execute it, if all the parties take it for granted at the trial that it was so. Appling v. State, 28: 548, 128 S. W. 866, — Ark. —.

14. Admission of hearsay evidence, without objection and exception, affords no ground for complaint in the appellate court. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 295, — W. Va. —.

Errors waived or cured below.

15. Error in sustaining an objection to a proper question is cured by admitting an answer to another question covering the same subject-matter. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 295, — W. Va. —.

Review of facts.

16. A jury finding in accordance with plaintiff's evidence, that two skylights, each 6 feet long and 3 feet wide, together with an opening in the wall 7 feet by 4 feet, and two windows, all located in that part of a room 16 feet by 32 feet, with an "L" 16 feet square, in which was located a hot water vat level with the floor, into which plaintiff, a servant, while working in such room, stepped, to his injury, did not admit sufficient light to enable him to see the vat, is not so contrary to the physical facts as to require a reversal, where neither the location in the room nor the dimensions of a brine tank, which it is claimed obstructed the light, appears, and there is evidence tending to show that the skylights were obscured by dirt and smoke, that there was a pile of lumber which also cut off some of the light, and that a slight vapor was rising from the hot water vat, although the accident occurred shortly after noon on a January day, the record not showing as to whether the day was bright and clear or dark and gloomy. Wichita Ice & C. S. Co. v. Sheppard, 28: 648, 108 Pac. 819, 82 Kan. 509.

17. To justify an appellate court in overturning a verdict, tending to support which there is some evidence, on the ground that it is contradicted by the natural laws or by some established principle of mathematics, mechanics, physics, or the like, the indisputable physical facts must demonstrate beyond any reasonable doubt that the evidence is false and that the verdict is without support in fact or law. Wichita Ice & C. S. Co. v. Sheppard, 28: 648, 108 Pac. 819, 82 Kan. 509.

18. The law court will not interfere with a finding of fact by a single justice on conflicting testimony, where the inferences from other facts proved in the case are not inconsistent with the finding. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

19. The appellate court, having no jurisdiction to review facts in an action at law, cannot review the facts upon appeal from the allowance of a claim against a decedent's estate, where the claim is for a legal demand and no defense is made which could not have been interposed in a suit at law. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

Grounds for reversal.

20. It is not reversible error to entertain a motion to strike out a separate defense to an action at the trial, if the defense is insufficient in law and has not been demurred to. Ampersand Hotel Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 28: 218, 91 N. E. 1099, 198 N. Y. 495.

21. A statute which provides that reversals shall not be ordered for errors which do not affirmatively appear prejudicially to have affected the substantial rights of the party complaining, when it appears that substantial justice has been done, does not authorize the affirmance of a judgment upon the ground that it is in accordance with the view of the facts which the reviewing court itself might derive from the conflicting evidence, where it is based on a verdict rendered under the apparent influence of a materially erroneous instruction, or by a jury made up in part of persons disqualified on account of interest. Broadway 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Mfg. Co. v. Leavenworth Terminal R. & B. Co. 28: 156, 106 Pac. 1034, 81 Kan. 616.

22. It is reversible error to transfer to the chancery court against the objection of the plaintiff an action properly triable at law. First Nat. Bank v. Reinman, 28: 530, 125 S. W. 443, — Ark. —.

23. In an action in form to recover the purchase price of chattels, where the cause of action is in fact for damages for breach of the agreement to purchase, a recovery upon the theory of the pleader will not be disturbed on appeal, if the judgment is not in excess of the amount plaintiff would have recovered had he proceeded in the proper way. Lincoln v. Charles Alshuler Mfg. Co. 28: 780, 125 N. W. 908, 142 Wis. 475.

24. On appeal by defendants from a decree in equity, failure of the trial court to dismiss the suit for misjoinder of plaintiffs and of causes of action does not require a reversal, where the record clearly shows that appellants were in no wise prejudiced thereby. Hamilton v. Allen, 28: 723, 125 N. W. 610, 86 Neb. 401.

25. The allowance, upon due notice and argument, and a long time prior to the trial, of an amendment of a complaint in an action to recover damages for delay in transportation of live stock, changing the point of destination from the end of the defendant's line, as originally alleged, to a point beyond such line, is not prejudicial to the defendant, where the amendment is in accordance with the allegations of the answer as to the place of destination, and the court strictly confines the damages to the loss occasioned by the neglect of defendant on its own line. Fell v. Union P. R. Co. 28: 1, 88 Pac. 1003, 32 Utah, 101.

26. Unduly limiting the cross-examination of a witness is not reversible error if no prejudice results therefrom. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

27. It is not reversible error to refuse to permit a question to be put to a witness who was a bystander at a time when a horse was injured, as to a remark which he made to the driver, if it is not made to appear that the expected answer would be relevant to any issue in the case. Weller v. Camp, 28: 1106, 52 So. 929, — Ala. —.

28. A modification of an instruction as to the specific evidence the jury is to consider, so as not to include that of a particular person, is not reversible error, if his testimony was included by a general charge as to consideration of evidence. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

29. Error in charging that proof of loss was sufficient under the terms of the insurance policy is harmless, where it appears from uncontradicted evidence that proof of loss had been waived. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Mittendorf, 28: 651, 104 Pac. 354, — Okla. —.

30. It is error to retain upon the jury, over a challenge, resident taxpayers of a city against which a judgment is sought, at least where there is no difficulty in procuring jurors whose impartiality is unquestioned. Broadway Mig. Co. v. Leavenworth Terminal R. & B. Co. 28: 156, 106 Pac. 1034, 81 Kan. 616.

31. It is not reversible error for the court to permit a jury trial, although notice of election to try the case to a jury was not given, as required by statute. Sholin v. Skamania Boom Co. 28: 1053, 105 Pac. 632, 56 Wash. 303.

Judgment.

32. An allowance to the administrator of $150 for the burial casket of the deceased, an old man with no immediate family surviving, who had been a sailor and engineer on small steamers, and of simple tastes and habits and modest and economical expenditures, will be reduced to $100 on appeal, where the decedent's estate was only $798.32, and the burial expenses, embracing the casket, exceeded one fourth of that amount,—especially where it appears that the sole legatees objected to the purchase of such an expensive casket, and the administrator was a person having knowledge of his duties as such. Kroll v. Close, 28: 571, 92 N. E. 29, — Ohio St. —. (Annotated)

33. On error to the overruling of a motion for a new trial on the ground of the inadequacy of the damages found by the jury in an action to recover for personal injuries, the reviewing court may reverse the judgment of the trial court, and grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence. Toledo Railways & L. Co. v. Mason, 28: 130, 91 N. E. 292, 81 Ohio St. 463. (Annotated)

34. On appeal from an order issuing out of a suit founded upon a creditor's bill, temporarily enjoining the prosecution of a suit for the same cause of action in a foreign court, where it clearly appears that the prosecution of such foreign action cannot be restrained, the appellate court must direct the dismissal of the bill as to the prayer for an injunction in order to save the parties to the suit further expense resulting from the endeavor to secure impossible relief. Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City S. R. Co. 28: 620, 171 Fed. 43, 93 C. C. A. 285.

35. A decision rendered on appeal, which is palpably erroneous, may be corrected on second appeal. Henry v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28: 1088, 109 Pac. 1005, — Kan. —.

36. That a point was involved in the record of a first appeal does not preclude its consideration and determination on a second appeal, where it was not brought to the attention of or considered by the court on the former appeal. Henry v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28: 1088, 109 Pac. 1005, — Kan. —.

APPEARANCE.

1. The appearance of a nonresident defendant in an action after the limitation period has run will not deprive plaintiff of the right to a judgment against property which he attached within the limitation period, although defendant is no longer subject to a personal judgment. Sater v. Roche, 28: 702, 126 N. W. 925, — Iowa, —.

2. The appearance of a nonresident defendant in an action commenced by attachment, after the limitation period has elapsed, does not authorize a personal judgment against him, where process was not served upon him within the limitation period. Sater v. Roche, 28: 702, 126 N. W. 925, — Iowa, —.

APPLIANCES.
Master's duty as to, see Master and Servant.

APPLIANCES.

Master's duty as to, see Master and Servant.

APPORTIONMENT.

Of costs, see Costs.

ARBITRATION.

Of insurance loss, see Evidence, 57; Insurance, 8.

ARCHITECT'S CERTIFICATE.

Conclusiveness of, see Contracts, 29.
Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 24.

ARREST.

Sufficiency of warrant for, see Criminal Law, 2.

ARTIFICIAL CONDITION.

Of water, see Waters, 2.

ASSAULT.

One who is assaulted upon the street, without provocation, by a much heavier man, and has applied to him in a tone that can be heard 175 feet distant the vilest of epithets, is entitled, although he was not physically injured by the assault, to such compensation for the indignities and vilification as money can afford. Carrick v. Joachim, 28: 85, 52 So. 173, — La. —. (Annotated)

ASSESSMENTS.

On members of social club, see Appeal and Error, 1; Clubs.

For public improvements, see Constitutional Law, 3; Public Improvements, 1, 2.

Of taxes, see Taxes, 4.

ASSIGNMENT.

For creditors, see Assignment for Creditors.

Statute regulating assignment of wages or salaries, see Constitutional Law, 2, 7.

Evidence to discredit alleged assignment of notes, see Evidence, 28.

ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS.

As to bankruptcy matters, see Bankruptcy.

One who takes from a debtor an assignment of property sufficient to pay all the debts of the assignor, under the agreement that he will pay them, cannot avoid liability to creditors on their claims. Dycus v. Brown, 28: 190, 121 S. W. 1010, 135 Ky. 140.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 4.

In motion for new trial, see New Trial, 2.

ASSUMPSIT.

Amendment of declaration so as to make action one in tort, see Pleading, 2.

1. A discharged employee cannot await the termination of the contract period of service to hold the employer liable for the wages which would have accrued had he continued in the service to the expiration of the term. Derosia v. Firland, 28: 577, 76 Atl. 153, — Vt. —. (Annotated)

2. One who pays an illegal tax to secure the rebate allowed by law for prompt payment cannot recover the money paid where, under the statute, he has a right to test in court the right to enforce the tax, and the taxing district has applied the money to the purposes for which it was collected. Louisville v. Becker, 28: 1045, 129 S. W. 311, — Ky. —.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

By servant, see Master and Servant, 10-15.

ATTACHMENT.

Effect of appearance of nonresident on rights of plaintiff in attachment, see Appearance.

Effect of discharge in bankruptcy on bond executed to release attached property of bankrupt, see Bankruptcy, 6.

Judicial notice of, see Evidence, 1.

When action is commenced, see Limitation of Actions, 8.

Sufficiency of delivery of chattels sold as against attachment, see Sale, 2.

Sufficiency of service of process, see Writ and Process, 1.

ATTORNEYS.

Allowing attorney's fee against defendant in action to enforce special assessment, see Constitutional Law, 3.

Counsel fees as elements of damages for ejection of passenger, see Damages, 2.

Attorneys' purchase for resale of subject-matter of their employment, see Evidence, 10, 42.

Delay in instituting suit caused by interference by stranger with attorneys, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

AUTOMATIC SPRINKLER.

Provision in insurance policy as to maintaining, see Insurance, 2, 3.

23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

AUTOMATIC VENDING MACHINE.

License tax on, see License, 9.

AUTOMOBILES.

It is not negligence per se for a man riding a bicycle along a street in front of an automobile to attempt to cross the road in front of the machine, if it was so far behind him that it might reasonably have been expected that the driver would see him, and could and would, by the exercise of proper care, so manage the machine as to avoid a collision; but the question is one for the jury under all the circumstances of the case. Rogers v. Phillips, 28: 944, 92 N. E. 327, — Mass. —.

BAILMENT.

Burden of proof as to negligence of bailee, see Evidence, 19.

Opinion evidence on question of negligence of bailee, see Evidence, 35.

One hiring horses to draw castings along a public road does not convert a team by detaching it from the wagon on which it is working, and attaching it to one of his own which has become stalled on a defective road, to assist in getting it out, so as to render him liable for an accident to it while it is so engaged. Weller v. Camp, 28: 1106, 52 So. 929, — Ala. —.

BANKING.

See Banks.

BANKRUPTCY.

Right to proceed in bankruptcy against insolvent who purchases goods on credit without disclosing facts, see Fraud and Deceit, 1.

Jurisdiction.

1. Where bankruptcy proceedings are not begun within four months of the filing of a preferential mortgage, so that the Federal court has no jurisdiction thereof, the state court may, if the proceedings are begun within the prescribed time, act under a state statute which makes such mortgage, when properly attacked, operate as a voluntary assignment for the benefit of all creditors; and it is immaterial that the bankrupt has, in the meantime, secured a discharge from the bankruptcy court. Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman, 28: 363, 121 S. W. 1042, 135 Ky. 163. (Annotated)

Rights in assets; title and rights of trustee.

Right of bank which has undertaken to hold bankrupt's deposit as a fund for creditors to set-off deposit against its own claim, see Banks, 3.

2. A trustee in bankruptcy has a right to recover money which has been deposited in bank by the bankrupt, for the benefit of all his creditors. Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. 28: 484, 122 S. W. 245, — Tenn. —.

Presentation of claims; what claims provable.

3. That a claim against a bankrupt grows out of a partnership venture does not relieve the partner holding it from the necessity of presenting it to, and having it audited by, the bankruptcy court. Dycus v. Brown, 28: 190, 121 S. W. 1010, 135 Ky. 140.

4. A claim for loss on a contract by which one party was to buy produce with money furnished by the other, and to ship it to the latter for sale, after which the net profits were to be divided, is provable in bankruptcy proceedings against the former, so as to be barred by the discharge if the creditor had notice of the proceedings and that a loss was likely to result from the undertaking, although, at the time of the proceedings, the produce had not all been disposed of, so that the amount of the claim was not then ascertained. Dycus v. Brown, 28: 190, 121 S. W. 1010, 135 Ky. 140.

5. The bankruptcy, before the time arrives, of one who has promised to return the amount paid for stock of a corporation if it is surrendered within a certain time, does not prevent the claim upon the contract from being a fixed liability, absolutely owing, at the time of the bankruptcy, so as to be provable under the bankruptcy act, since the promisee may treat the bankruptcy as a repudiation of liability and immediately bring an action for damages. Re Neff, 28: 349, 157 Fed. 57, 84 C. C. A. 561.

(Annotated)

Discharge; effect.

See also supra, 4.

6. A discharge in bankruptcy releases liability on a bond executed to release property of the bankrupt attached less than four months before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, where the bankruptcy statute makes attachments levied against the bankrupt within that time void, although the giving of the bond had released the attachment before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings. Crook-Horner Co. v. Gilpin, 28: 233, 75 Atl. 1049, 112 Md. 1.

(Annotated)

7. Creditors having notice of all steps taken in bankruptcy proceedings against their debtor occupy the same attitude, so far as the barring of claims is concerned, as though they had been mentioned in the petition. Dycus v. Brown, 28: 190, 121 S. W. 1010, 135 Ky. 140.

8. A debtor who has secured goods with the fraudulent intention not to pay for them cannot avoid an action in the state court for fraud by securing a discharge in bankruptcy upon a voluntary petition presented by him. Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman, 28: 363, 121 S. W. 1042, 135 Ky. 163.

9. Inducing the abandonment of a suit on a note and surrender of the instrument by a promise to pay the same, when falsely made to secure time to conceal assets and take advantage of bankruptcy proceedings, is not such fraud as will prevent the discharge of the debt in such proceedings. Jenkins v. Pilcher, 28: 423, 125 N. W. 355, 160 Mich. 349.

(Annotated)

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

BANKS.

Acceptance by bank as agent for contractor for public work of warrant in full payment, see Accord and Satisfaction.

Right of trustee in bankruptcy to bank deposit, see Bankruptcy, 2.

Notice to bank officer or employee as notice to bank, see Notice.

Authority of cashier.

1. The cashier of a bank has no authority to bind the bank by his promise that one signing paper without consideration, to replace that of the cashier, to enable the bank to pass inspection, shall not be held liable thereon, and one signing such paper is chargeable with notice of such want of authority, and acts at his peril in relying on the promise. State Bank v. Forsyth, 28: 501, 108 Pac. 914, — Mont. —.

(Annotated)

2. A bank cashier has no authority, simply by virtue of his office, to accept for the bank, unknown to the directors thereof, a qualified indorsement on a promissory note, irrespective of whether the note is an original one presented for discount, or one taken in judgment or in renewal of a pre-existing note. First Nat. Bank v. Lowther-Kaufman Oil & C. Co. 28: 511, 66 S. E. 713, 66 W. Va. 505.

(Annotated)

Application of deposit.

3. A bank which, through its president, as one of the creditors of a manufacturing company, has agreed with it and the other creditors that the assets of the company shall be collected and deposited in the bank, to be divided among all creditors pro rata, cannot, upon the institution of bankruptcy proceedings against the corporation, set off the fund so accumulated against its own claim, since the fund is a trust deposit for specific purposes, created with the knowledge and consent of the bank, and it cannot, for purposes of set-off, treat it as the individual property of the corporation. Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. 28: 484, 122 S. W. 245, — Tenn. —.

(Annotated)

BATTERY.

See Assault and Battery.

BENEFITS.

Estoppel by receiving, see Estoppel, 5.

Resting assessment of benefits upon prospective action in completing improvement, see Public Improvements, 1.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Insurance by, see Insurance.

BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 23.

BETTERMENTS.

Retaining jurisdiction to settle amount of allowance for, see Equity, 5.

BICYCLES.

Negligence of person riding, see Automobiles.

BILLS.

See Statutes.

BILLS AND NOTES.

- Promise by cashier to one signing note without consideration, see Banks, 1.
- Admissibility of notes in evidence, see Evidence, 28.
- Joint judgment against maker and indorser of paper, see Parties, 3.
- Authority of agent to take notes in payment, see Trial, 13.
- Competency of maker as witness in action by assignee against administrator of assignor, see Witnesses, 1.

Consideration.

- Want of consideration as defense, see infra, 6.
- Imputed notice of lack of consideration for note, see Notice, 1.

1. The surrender by a bank of paper which it holds against its cashier, in exchange for that of a stranger, is sufficient consideration to enable it to enforce the substituted paper. State Bank v. Forsyth, 28: 501, 108 Pac. 914, — Mont. —.

Indorsement and transfer.

- Acceptance by bank cashier of qualified indorsement on note, see Banks, 2.
- Parol evidence as to indorsements, see Evidence, 33.

2. The one whose name stands first among those of several persons who place their names on the back of a note before delivery cannot, upon paying the note, compel the others to contribute towards the amount paid, in the absence of any express agreement that they should, be equally bound. Porter v. Huie, 28: 1039, 126 S. W. 1069, — Ark. —.

Renewal; extension.

- Acceptance by bank of qualified indorsement on renewal of note, see Banks, 2.

Ratification by payee of act of agent in obtaining renewal note, see Principal and Agent, 5.

3. An agent who takes up a past-due note with money furnished by the maker cannot give such note validity, as a negotiable instrument, by indorsing thereon an extension of time, so as to render one to whom it has been fraudulently reissued by such agent a bona fide holder. Thiel v. Butker, 28: 1065, 51 So. 500, 125 La. 473.

4. The maker of a promissory note which has been fraudulently reissued after maturity by an agent, after payment thereof with funds furnished by the maker, is not liable on the dishonored paper, provided he has acted in good faith. Thiel v. Butker, 28: 1065, 51 So. 500, 125 La. 473.

Defenses.

5. Breach of a parol warranty of a chattel may be set up as a defense to an action on a promissory note which recites that its consideration is the purchase price of such chattel, but is otherwise silent as to terms, representations, and warranties, since 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

such recital indicates that the terms of the sale have been integrated in the writing. Pryor v. Ludden & B. Southern Music House, 28: 267, 67 S. E. 654, — Ga. —.

(Annotated)

6. Want of consideration is a defense to the enforcement of a note by the payee against the maker, although it purports on its face to have been given for value received. State Bank v. Forsyth, 28: 501, 108 Pac. 914, — Mont. —.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Of personalty, see Sale, 7-9.

BONDS.

- Executed to release property of bankrupt, see Bankruptcy, 6.
- Increasing penalty of bond in prosecution for abandonment by husband, see Constitutional Law, 1.
- Release of surety on bond of insurance agent, see Principal and Surety, 1.
- Right of surety on bond of public officer to recover from other officer for loss through latter's neglect to require proper settlement of accounts, see Principal and Surety, 2, 3.
- Issue of, in excess of authorized indebtedness, see State.
- Railroad aid bonds, see Railroads, 1.

BONUS.

Contract to pay bonus to electric railway, see Contracts, 8, 18, 19; Evidence, 34.

BOOK.

Secondary evidence of contents, see Evidence, 23.

BOUNDARIES.

Of mining location, see Mines, 1, 2.

BREACH.

- Of contracts generally, see Contracts, 30.
- Of covenant, see Covenants and Conditions.

BRIDGES.

- Acceptance of warrant in payment for construction of, as accord and satisfaction, see Accord and Satisfaction.
- Estoppel to deny liability for building of, see Estoppel, 1.
- Presumption of negligence from carrying away of railroad bridge by high water, see Evidence, 16.
- Flooding of land caused by construction of, see Limitation of Actions, 4.
- Right of private action for negligent destruction of, see Nuisance.
- Compelling railroad to construct highway bridge over tracks, see Railroads, 7.
- Duty of builder of, to provide for passage of water, see Trial, 18; Waters, 4.

Defects; injuries on.

Evidence in action for injuries caused by fall of, see Evidence, 46.

1. The mere fact that a bridge is narrower than the highway, and that the barriers extend from the side of the bridge at right angles instead of being at an acute angle with the stream, does not constitute a wrongful construction, within the meaning of a statute rendering the county board of chosen freeholders liable for injury resulting from the wrongful neglect to erect, rebuild, or repair the bridges over which they have control. Halm v. Board of Chosen Freeholders (N. J. Err. & App.) 28: 946, 76 Atl. 1014, — N. J. —.

2. Lighting a bridge by artificial light is not a part of its erection, rebuilding, or repairing, within the meaning of a statute rendering the county board of chosen freeholders liable for injury resulting from the wrongful neglect to erect, rebuild, or repair the bridges over which they have control. Halm v. Board of Chosen Freeholders (N. J. Err. & App.) 28: 946, 76 Atl. 1014, — N. J. —.

BROKERS.

A real-estate broker who, to secure the terms on which he is authorized to sell, effects an intermediate sale to one who for a bonus is willing to comply with the owner's terms and hold the property subject to such terms as the true purchaser can meet, thereby securing a commission of which his principal is ignorant, is bound to account to him for it. Easterly v. Mills, 28: 952, 103 Pac. 475, 54 Wash. 356.

BROTHERS.

Fiduciary relation between, see Evidence, 3, 4.

BUILDING CONTRACT.

See Contracts, 4, 5, 31.

BUILDINGS.

Building restrictions in covenants, see Covenants and Conditions, 1, 3-7.

Injury by electric wires in moving building through street, see Electricity, 1, 2.

Injunction to compel modification of building so as to comply with building restrictions, see Injunction, 2, 3.

Negligence of independent contractor placing fire escapes on, see Master and Servant, 25, 26.

Master's duty to inspect fire escapes erected by independent contractor, see Trial, 11.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

In general, see Evidence, 2-22.

BY-LAWS.

Of social clubs, see Clubs, 2.

CANCELATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

1. An oil and gas lease in which there is no express provision requiring additional 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

wells cannot be canceled in equity for failure to drill such wells. McGraw Oil & G. Co. v. Kennedy, 28: 959, 64 S. E. 1027, 65 W. Va. 595.

2. A parent, who conveys real property to his son in consideration of the son's agreement, evidenced by a separate instrument in the form of a bond in a penal sum the payment of which is conditioned on failure to perform, to support and maintain the parent during the remainder of his life, may, in an equitable action for breach of the agreement, have the deed or conveyance set aside or the amount due under the agreement made a charge or lien against the land, or such other relief as the equities between the parties may justify, irrespective of whether or not the agreement of support be considered a condition subsequent, as the form thereof is immaterial. Bruer v. Bruer, 28: 608, 123 N. W. 813, 109 Minn. 260. (Annotated)

CARBONATED BEVERAGES.

Negligence in bottling of, see Trial, 4, 5.

CARE.

Presumption of, see Trial, 3.

CARRIERS.

Injunction against filing of rates by, with interstate commerce commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.

Attempting to compel railroad to construct and operate spur track to private establishment as a taking of property, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

Mandamus to compel construction and operation of side track and switch to private establishment, see Mandamus, 5.

Proximate cause of injury to passenger, see Proximate Cause, 2.

Directions as to route.

1. A carrier's agent selling a passage ticket is not bound to volunteer information unsought with respect to the route over which it must be used. McKinley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 28: 611, 127 S. W. 483, — Ky. —.

2. A ticket agent at a union junction point at which a passenger changes cars is not, when asked by him when a train leaves for his destination, bound to ascertain which route his ticket requires him to take, and see that he takes the right train; but performs his duty, in the absence of any special request, by stating the times at which trains leave over the several routes which reach the passenger's destination. McKinley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 28: 611, 127 S. W. 483, — Ky. —.

Who are passengers.

3. One who goes to a railroad station a few minutes before the arrival of his train is entitled to the rights of a passenger, although his intention is merely to leave his hand baggage, and depart again to transact some personal business before train time, where by statute the railroad company is required to keep its station open at least an hour before the arrival of trains; and he may therefore hold the railroad company liable for an injury due to the unsafe condition of the premises. Metcalf v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. 28: 311, 52 So. 355, — Miss. —. (Annotated)

Ejection of passenger.

Damages for wrongful ejection, see Damages, 2.

Evidence in action for ejection, see Evidence, 41.

4. A railroad company is not liable for ejecting from its train a woman whose ticket was not good on its road, and who refused to pay fare, about a mile from the station at which she embarked in a city in the night, where she made no request to be put off at any other place, except to be returned to the embarking point, if the place of ejection is as convenient to her as any place along the line, unless she should be returned to the embarking point or carried to destination. McKinley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 28: 611, 127 S. W. 483, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

Injuries in getting on or off.

Proximate cause of injury, see Proximate Cause, 2.

Correctness of verdict for plaintiff, see Trial, 23.

5. The failure of a carrier fully to stop a train at the destination of a passenger, and afford him an opportunity to alight with safety, is culpable negligence. Walters v. Missouri P. R. Co. 28: 1058, 109 Pac. 173, 82 Kan. 739.

6. A railroad company is not liable for injury to a passenger who falls from a train in consequence of the attempt of its brakeman to prevent his alighting from it after it is in motion. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Bell, 28: 773, 68 S. E. 398, — Va. —.

7. A person who is not given a reasonable time to alight from a train before it continues on its journey is bound to minimize the possible loss to the company because of its wrongdoing by staying on the train, and not attempting to leave it after it is in motion, to the peril of his life and limb, with the view of holding the company liable in case of injury. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Bell, 28: 773, 68 S. E. 398, — Va. —.

8. A passenger who, at the imperative direction of the conductor, alights in the nighttime from a passenger train as it is passing his destination at a speed of 3 or 4 miles an hour, is not negligent as matter of law, where the conductor directed him as to the manner of alighting, and it was not so dark as to prevent the passenger from seeing where he was stepping. Walters v. Missouri P. R. Co. 28: 1058, 109 Pac. 173, 82 Kan. 739.
28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Carriers of freight.

Amendment of complaint in action for damages for delay, see Appeal and Error, 25.

What constitutes interstate shipment, see Commerce, 1.

Ratification by shipper of contract limiting liability, see Contracts, 25.

Duress in obtaining signature to contract limiting liability, see Duress.

Interest on amount recovered for injuries to stock, see Interest, 2.

Mandamus to compel carrier to make provision for transportation of coal, see Mandamus, 7, 8.

Question for jury as to whether shipper has bound himself to sign contract limiting liability, see Trial, 9.

9. A coal operator does not lose his rights under W. Va. Code 1906, § 2364, which provides that railroad corporations shall without discrimination make reasonable provision for the transportation of coal mined and coke manufactured and offered for transportation along their lines, and imposes a penalty for violation of the act, merely because negotiations for a contract for the transportation of his coal have failed, as the act is mandatory. State ex rel. Mt. Hope Coal Co. v. White Oak R. Co. 28: 1013, 64 S. E. 630, 65 W. Va. 15.

10. A carrier is not liable to the consignor for failure to deliver to the consignee an interstate shipment of intoxicating liquor which, after arrival at destination and storage in defendant's warehouse, has been seized over the carrier's protest by officers acting under warrant issued in conformity to a statute authorizing seizures of liquors in possession of any person for unlawful use, where the consignor has actual notice of such seizure in time to bring an action to recover the goods, under a provision of such law requiring the keeping of such liquors for thirty days before being destroyed or forfeited to the state, and providing that during that period any person may bring an action for its recovery, although such law may be unconstitutional, if it has never been declared so, since the carrier may presume that the consignor had abandoned the liquor as subject to the process which seized it. Southern Express Co. v. Sotille Brothers, 28: 139, 67 S. E. 414, — Ga. —. (Annotated)

11. A carrier, by wrongfully refusing to deliver goods upon demand made promptly after notice to the consignee to remove them, renders itself liable for their destruction upon the following day by an unprecedented flood, as the carrier, because of the wrongful detention, held the goods at its own risk. Henry v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28: 1088, 109 Pac. 1005, — Kan. —.

12. A shipper of cattle may rightfully refuse to sign a special contract limiting the carrier's common-law liability, if the preliminary negotiations relating to the shipment did not result in a valid agreement that it shall be made under such a contract, although he knows the custom of carriers to require written contracts and, in the course of long experience as a shipper, had always signed written contracts, and, following the negotiations, intended to sign a contract of the kind he had been using for similar shipments, although he was not familiar with the terms thereof. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643.

13. A contract between shipper and carrier fixing the value of property to be transported as a basis for carrier's charges, which shall be binding on the shipper in case of loss, is not forbidden by the provision of the Carmack amendment of the Hepburn act of Congress, that no contract shall exempt the carrier from liability for loss of property caused by itself or by any connecting carrier. Bernard v. Adams Exp. Co. 28: 293, 91 N. E. 325, 205 Mass. 254.

(Annotated)

14. A shipper who by his authorized agent fills out a printed receipt blank which is tendered to, and the terms thereof accepted by, the carrier, is bound by a clause therein limiting the carrier's liability, since, by himself preparing the receipt, the shipper made it his own contract, notwithstanding the blank form when furnished by the carrier already contained the liability clause. Perrin v. United States Express Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 28: 645, 74 Atl. 462, — N. J. —.

(Annotated)

CARS.

Effect of difficulty in obtaining on seller's liability for delay, see Sale, 3.

Duty of one accepting order f. o. b. to procure and load cars, see Sale, 4.

CASE.

No action lies to recover for the loss of his bargain by one who had contracted to purchase property, against another who induced the vendor to break his contract and transfer title to him, unless the vendor acted against his will or contrary to his purpose by coercion or deception. Swain v. Johnson, 28: 615, 65 S. E. 619, 151 N. C. 93.

(Annotated)

CASHIER.

Authority of, see Banks, 1, 2.

Imputing knowledge of, to bank, see Notes, 1.

CATTLE YARDS.

Forbidding maintenance of, in residence district, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

CAUSE.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 13.

Proximate cause, see Proximate Cause. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CAVEAT EMPTOR.

Application of rule to purchase at judicial sale, see Judicial Sale, 1.

CERTIFICATE.

Of performance of contract, see Contracts, 29.

Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 24.

CERTIORARI.

1. If the court attempts to enforce an order to allow an inspection of papers, the one against whom it is entered may appeal from the order imposing the punishment; and therefore a writ of certiorari will not lie to review an order of inspection, where the statute authorizes such writ only where no appeal is allowed. State ex rel. Seattle General Contract Co. v. Superior Court, 28: 516, 106 Pac. 150, 56 Wash. 649.

2. An order for inspection of books and papers in possession of defendant may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment which may be entered in the case, and therefore cannot be taken up under a writ of review, where the statute authorizes such writ only where no appeal is provided. State ex rel. Seattle General Contract Co. v. Superior Court, 28: 516, 106 Pac. 150, 56 Wash. 649.

(Annotated)

CHARGE.

On devisee, see Wills, 11.

CHARITIES.

What are charities.

1. A bequest for masses for testator and certain specified relatives being, under the doctrine of the Catholic Church, for the benefit of all mankind, is a valid public charity, and not subject to statutory provisions governing the creation of private charities. Re Kavanaugh, 28: 470, 126 N. W. 672, — Wis. —.

Conditions; existence and capacity of beneficiaries.

2. A statute requiring a devise of land to be made directly to the beneficiary, and not to a trustee, is not applicable to public charities or in cases where the will works conversion of the property into personalty. Re Kavanaugh, 28: 470, 126 N. W. 672, — Wis. —.

3. A devise of real estate for the celebration of masses, being for a public charity, is not invalid, although title is not vested in anyone. Re Kavanaugh, 28: 470, 126 N. W. 672, — Wis. —.

Definiteness; discretion of trustee.

4. A bequest for masses for certain specified purposes, to be used under direction of specified persons, is not void for uncertainty. Re Kavanaugh, 28: 470, 126 N. W. 672, — Wis. —.

CHARTER.

Construction of railroad charter, see Railroads, 8.

CLAIMS.

Against bankrupt estate, see Bankruptcy, 3-5.

Against city, presentation of, see Municipal Corporations, 5.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

See Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

CLERGYMAN.

Libel of, see Libel and Slander, 1.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

Tender out of court of amount due on mortgage as basis for right to removal of mortgage from record as cloud on title, see Mortgage, 5.

One whose only title to land is under a tax deed made to a grantee, who was dead when it was executed, which was delivered to the former as the heir of the grantee, who caused the deed to be recorded and paid the taxes on the land, but who never took actual possession, cannot maintain an action to quiet title, or for an injunction against one who holds under the government title and who is in actual possession of the land. Baker v. Lane, 28: 405, 109 Pac. 182, 82 Kan. 715.

CLUBS.

Appeal from decrees directing members to pay assessments, see Appeal and Error, 1.

Bill in equity by receiver to recover dues from members, see Equity, 3, 4.

1. Members of a social club cannot avoid paying their dues to its receiver on the theory that they have not, because of the receivership, enjoyed the expected benefits of membership, where they accrued before the receiver was appointed. Rogers v. Boston Club, 28: 743, 91 N. E. 321, 205 Mass. 261.

2. Under by-laws of a social club permitting assessments to be made by a majority of an executive committee and constituting one fourth of the committee a quorum, the assessments must be made by a majority of the committee, and not of the quorum. Rogers v. Boston Club, 28: 743, 91 N. E. 321, 205 Mass. 261.

COAL.

Duty of railroad to make provision for transportation of, see Carriers, 9; Constitutional Law, 6; Mandamus, 5, 7, 8.

CODEFENDANTS.

Dismissal as to one; right of other to complain, see Dismissal and Discontinuance, 1.

COKE.

Duty of railroad to make provision for transportation of, see Carriers, 9; Constitutional Law, 6; Mandamus, 5, 7, 8.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

COMITY.

See Conflict of Laws.

COMMERCE.

As to interstate commerce commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.

Regulating carriers and transportation.

1. The passage of a shipment of live stock between points within a state, for a short distance over the territory of another state, renders the shipment one of interstate commerce, so as to render inapplicable thereto a state statute requiring common carriers of live stock within the state to maintain a minimum rate of speed unless prevented by unavoidable cause, as such statute does not apply to interstate commerce. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Yeibengood, 28: 985, 109 Pac. 988, — Kan. —.

Regulating and licensing sales, etc.

2. A state constitutional clause prohibiting the conveying of intoxicating liquors from one place within the state to another place therein, in the absence of prohibitory legislation by the state, is not within the scope and operation of a Federal statute subjecting interstate shipments of intoxicating liquors to state laws passed in the exercise of their police power. High v. State, 28: 162, 101 Pac. 115, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 161.

3. Conveying intoxicating liquors which have been shipped from another state, from a railway station to the home of the consignee, is a part of the interstate commerce transportation, and is not violative of a state constitutional clause prohibiting the conveying of intoxicating liquors from one place within the state to another place therein, as such provision has no application to interstate shipments, until there has been a delivery thereof. High v. State, 28: 162, 101 Pac. 115, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 161.

4. Under the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, a resident of one state may order and receive a shipment of whisky from another state, and convey it in the original package from the depot at which the shipment arrives to his home. High v. State, 28: 162, 101 Pac. 115, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 161.

5. The sale within the state of a frame for a portrait, made in another state, to fill an order taken by a solicitor in the former state, cannot be so separated from the rest of the dealings between the nonresident maker and the purchaser as to sustain the imposition of a license tax under Ala. act of March 7, 1907, § 17, where the order for the portrait contemplated its delivery in an appropriate frame, which the purchaser of the portrait should have the option of buying at the factory price. Dozier v. State, 28: 264, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 649, 218 U. S. 124, 54 L. ed. 965. (Annotated)

COMMISSIONS.

Of real estate agent, see Brokers.

Review by courts of orders of, see Courts, 1.

COMMITTEE.

Of incompetent, see Incompetent Persons.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

Power of agent of public contractor to compromise dispute with city as to amount due him, see Accord and Satisfaction, 2.

CONCLUSIVENESS.

Of architect's certificate, see Contracts, 29.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 2-4.

CONDEMNATION.

See Eminent Domain.

CONDITIONAL FEE.

Creation of by will, see Wills, 8.

CONDITIONS.

Conditions precedent to right of action, see Action or Suit.

Precedent to suit, see Action or Suit, 1.

To performance of contract, see Contracts, 29.

Relating to real property, see Covenants and Conditions.

In insurance contract, see Insurance.

Notice of injury as condition precedent to master's liability, see Master and Servant, 2, 3.

In telegraph blank, see Telegraphs, 3.

CONFIDENTIAL RELATION.

Burden of establishing, see Evidence, 3, 4.

CONFIRMATION.

Of judicial sale, see Judicial Sale, 3.

Of sale under power in mortgage, see Mortgage, 8.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

As to telegrams.

1. The courts of the forum will not, in an action to recover damages for nondelivery of a telegram, enforce a provision of a contract for transmission of the message limiting the liability of the company, which is void under the public policy of the forum, although it is valid in the state where the contract was made and in that where the breach occurred, so that no action could have been brought for the breach in either state. Fox v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 28: 490, 120 N. W. 399, 138 Wis. 648.

(Annotated)

As to marriage.

2. A marriage between parties within a class prohibited by the law of their domicil, enacted in another state where it is valid, is valid at the domicil, in the absence of legislative enactment that such marriages outside of the domicil shall be invalid therein, although resort was made to the foreign state for the purpose of avoiding 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the domiciliary law. State v. Hand, 28: 753, 126 N. W. 1002, — Neb. —.

(Annotated)

CONSIDERATION.

For note, see Bills and Notes, 1.

For contracts, generally, see Contracts, 4, 5.

Parol evidence as to, see Evidence, 34.

Sufficiency of, as question for jury, see Trial, 12.

CONSPIRACY.

To burn insured property as defense to recovery where property is otherwise destroyed, see Insurance, 13.

CONSTABLE.

Liability for killing dog, see Animals, 2.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Ex post facto laws.

1. An amendatory act increasing the penalty of a bond essential to the suspension of sentence in a prosecution against a husband for abandonment is ex post facto as to prior offenses. State v. McCoy, 28: 583, 127 N. W. 137, — Neb. —.

Equal protection and privileges.

2. A statute making void assignments of wages or salaries when given as security for loans tainted with usury is invalid where no such provision is made with respect to other instruments or conveyances given to secure such debts. Massie v. Cassina, 28: 1108, 88 N. E. 152, 239 Ill. 352.

3. The legislature may allow an attorney's fee against one whose delinquency makes necessary a proceeding to enforce a special assessment for public improvements against his property, although no such fee is allowed in his favor. Engbretsen v. Gay, 28: 1062, 109 Pac. 880, — Cal. —.

Due process; right to life, liberty, and property.

4. A requirement by the state that railroad companies whose lines intersect public highways laid out after the construction of a railroad, shall, without compensation, construct and maintain such safety devices as are reasonably necessary for public safety, being referable to the police power, is not a taking of private property for public use, in violation of the Constitution. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 231, 98 Minn. 380.

(Annotated)

5. The attempt by the state to compel a railroad company to construct and operate a spur track to a private mill is void, as a taking of property for private use without due process of law. Northern P. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 28: 1021, 108 Pac. 938, — Wash. —.

6. Requiring a railroad company, under a statute providing that railroad corporations shall make "reasonable provision" for the transportation of coal mined along their lines, to construct a switch and side track on its right of way, as a reasonable provision for the transportation of coal offered for shipment by the coal operator, does not amount to a command that the carrier enter into a contract for reasonable provisions for the transportation of such coal, or that it build and maintain a permanent structure on its right of way, nor to the taking of the private property of the carrier for private use without due process of law, but is a mere command for the temporary use by such carrier of a part of its right of way for the purpose of performing a duty imposed upon it by law. State ex rel. Mt. Hope Coal Co. v. White Oak R. Co. 28: 1013, 64 S. E. 630, 65 W. Va. 15.

7. A statute making invalid the assignment of any salary unless it is in writing, signed and acknowledged by the assignor and his or her husband or wife, and the assignment entered on the justice's docket and a copy served upon the employer, is invalid as interfering with the constitutional rights of liberty and property of the one earning it. Massie v. Cessna, 28: 1108, 88 N. E. 152, 239 Ill. 352.

Police power.

See also supra, 4.

8. The state may, in the exercise of its police power, impose upon railroad companies whose lines intersect public highways laid out after the construction of the railroad, the uncompensated duty of constructing and maintaining at such crossing all such safety devices as are reasonably necessary for the protection of the traveling public. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 261, 98 Minn. 380.

9. The legislature may, under the police power, provide for the assessment of a fixed proportion of the cost of a public sanitary sewer upon abutting property by the front-foot rule, so that each parcel pays for the cost of its local service sewer without regard to the benefits actually accruing to the property. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Janesville, 28: 1124, 118 N. W. 182, 137 Wis. 7.

Impairing obligation of contracts.

10. A decree for the future payment of alimony is, as to instalments past due and unpaid, within the protection of the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, provided that no modification of the decree was made prior to the maturity of such instalments, unless, by the law of the state in which the decree was rendered, its enforcement is so completely within the discretion of the courts of that state that they may annul or modify the decree, even as to overdue and unsatisfied instalments. Sistare v. Sistare, 28: 1068, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 682, 218 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 905.

11. Decrees of the New York courts for the future payment of alimony are not subject to annulment or modification by those courts as to overdue and unsatisfied instalments, so as to deprive such decrees of the protection, as to past-due and unpaid instalments, of the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. Sistare v. Sistare, 28: 1068, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 682, 218 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 905.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of contracts, see Contracts, 17-20.
Of insurance policy, see Insurance.
Of wills, see Wills.

CONTEMPT.

Statute permitting enforcement by contempt proceedings of order for inspection, see Discovery and Inspection.

CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

The court may grant a continuance to permit the securing of a copy of a contract, proof of which is necessary to the decision of the case, where objection is made to its proof by parol evidence. Sholin v. Skamania Boom Co. 28: 1053, 105 Pac. 632, 56 Wash. 303.

CONTRACTS.

Impairing obligation of, see Constitutional Law, 10, 11.

As to covenants, see Covenants and Conditions.

Duress as ground for cancelling, see Duress.

Estoppel to avoid contract for duress, see Estoppel, 5.

Of infants, see Infants.

As to mortgages, see Mortgage.

Of municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporations, 3, 4.

By agent, see Principal and Agent.

Reformation of, see Reformation of Instruments.

Rescission of land contract, see Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

1. An agreement to make a contract in the future is not binding unless all the terms and conditions are agreed upon, and nothing is left to future negotiations. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643.

Parties.

2. The mere signing of one's name to a contract does not make him a party thereto, if the contract states that it is between other parties, and the person so signing is not mentioned therein. Shriner v. Craft, 28: 450, 51 So. 884, — Ala. —.

Implied agreements.

Estoppel to recover on implied contract, see Estoppel, 2.

3. Where one's land has been appropriated without first securing the right, as a railway right of way, and a road constructed thereon, he may waive his remedies in ejectment, injunction, and trespass, and, assuming that the company could acquire the land in condemnation proceedings, waive such proceeding, and sue as upon an implied contract to pay the reasonable value of the land taken. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

Consideration.

For bills or notes, see Bills and Notes, 1, 6.

Parol evidence as to consideration, see Evidence, 34.

Effect of inadequacy of consideration for option on right to performance of contract to convey after option has been accepted, see Specific Performance, 2.

Sufficiency of consideration as question for jury, see Trial, 12.

4. The promise by one party to a building contract to pay more for the work than the amount called for in the contract, upon the refusal or threatened refusal of the contractor to go on with the work, the original contract still remaining in force, is without consideration and unenforceable. Shriner v. Craft, 28: 450, 51 So. 884, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

5. A promise of additional compensation, to induce a contractor who has abandoned his work because of insufficiency of the compensation to proceed with his contract, is enforceable after the contract has been performed in reliance thereon. Evans v. Oregon & W. R. Co. 28: 455, 108 Pac. 1095, — Wash. —.

Mutuality.

6. Acceptance, within the time limited, of an option to purchase real estate, removes the objection to the enforcement of the contract on the ground of want of mutuality. Smith v. Bangham, 28: 522, 104 Pac. 689, 156 Cal. 359.

7. A contract for the sale of land is not void for lack of mutuality from the fact that it is not enforceable against the vendee, because he did not sign the memorandum, as required by the statute of frauds, at least, where the statute provides that a party who has signed a written contract may be compelled specifically to perform it, though the other party has not signed it, if the latter has performed or offers to perform it. Harper v. Goldschmidt, 28: 689, 104 Pac. 451, 156 Cal. 245.

Definiteness.

8. An electric railway bonus contract by the terms of which the bonus is payable as soon as the railway company or its assigns have constructed and put in operation its road from B. to a certain described strip of land, and afforded a specified service thereon, is certain and definite as to the time the obligation matures. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

Offers and their acceptance; options.

Effect as to strangers of decree for specific performance of option contract, see Judgment, 3.

Specific performance of, see Specific Performance.

See also supra, 6.

9. The acceptance, within the time specified, of an option which had been given for a nominal consideration to purchase real estate belonging to a husband, supersedes 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the wife's declaration of homestead upon the property made with notice of the option, after it had taken effect. Smith v. Bangham, 28: 522, 104 Pac. 689, 156 Cal. 359. (Annotated)

10. One contracting for the conveyance of land upon demand must make the demand within a reasonable time, and is not privileged to postpone performance on his part indefinitely. Smith v. Bangham, 28: 522, 104 Pac. 689, 156 Cal. 359.

Statute of frauds.

Demurrer to complaint showing that contract was within statute of frauds, see Pleading, 9.

See also supra, 7.

11. A promise by an owner of timber lands who has contracted to have the timber removed and manufactured into lumber, to hold back the amount which the contractor has promised to pay another to do the logging, and pay it to him, is not a promise to pay the debt of another within the statute of frauds. Dale v. Gaither Lumber Co. 28: 407, 68 S. E. 134, 152 N. C. 651.

12. A written contract or memorandum of sale is necessary to enforce against one tenant in common a contract for sale of real estate negotiated by his cotenant, although he authorizes the latter in writing to make the sale. Hartenbower v. Uden, 28: 738, 90 N. E. 298, 242 Ill. 434. (Annotated)

13. Neither a draft of a deed nor a written notice to execute the same is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds as to a memorandum of the sale of real estate, where they do not contain the terms of sale. Hartenbower v. Uden, 28: 738, 90 N. E. 298, 242 Ill. 434.

14. A promise signed by the promoter of a corporation to pay for stock taken by a subscriber upon its surrender within a certain time is not invalid under the statute of frauds because not signed by the subscriber. Re Neff, 28: 349, 157 Fed. 57, 84 C. C. A. 561.

15. Under a statute providing that no action shall be brought to charge any person upon any contract for the sale of real estate unless the promise be in writing and signed by the person to be charged, a vendor who has not signed a contract cannot maintain an action to charge the vendee thereon, although the latter has expressed his assent in writing sufficiently to satisfy the statute. Murray v. Crawford, 28: 680, 127 S. W. 494, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

16. Under a statute making invalid contracts within the statute of frauds unless a memorandum thereof be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged, an action for specific performance cannot be maintained against a vendee who did not sign the agreement, although he paid a small portion of the purchase money, and accepted a receipt therefor. Harper v. Goldschmidt, 28: 689, 104 Pac. 451, 156 Cal. 215. (Annotated)

Construction.

Parol evidence to vary terms as to time when obligation becomes due, see Evidence, 30.

Construction of contract as question for court, see Trial, 6.

17. Printed matter in the heads of letters upon which a contract is written, which is not referred to in the writing, is not a part of the contract. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28: 1007, 108 Pac. 621, — Wash. —.

18. An agreement whereby a landowner, in consideration of $1 and other consideration, agreed to convey a described strip of land for an electric railway right of way as soon as the track was laid thereon, and, for other like consideration, further agreed to pay a stipulated sum as soon as the railway company put the line in operation from B. to such described strip of land, with a specified service thereon, embodies two complete contracts; one for a conveyance of a right of way, and the other to pay a bonus as specified, the latter of which may be enforced by the railway company upon completion of its road to the boundary line of the described premises and the institution of the stipulated services, although it may not be in a position to demand the right of way, because it has not complied with that part of the agreement providing for a conveyance thereof. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

19. A contract providing for the payment of a bonus upon the putting in operation of a certain electric railway from B. "to the strip of land above described" does not mean "upon or over," but merely "to," the boundary of such strip of land. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

20. Language in an acceptance of an order for goods, "We accept and enter same for shipment. . . . We anticipate making shipment,"—requires the seller to furnish cars. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28: 1007, 108 Pac. 621, — Wash. —.

Validity; public policy.

Limitation of liability by carrier, see Carriers, 12-15; Trial, 9.

Limitation of liability by telegraph company, see Conflict of Laws, 1.

Finding that contract is void as one of law, see Trial, 21.

21. A physician duly licensed in the state where the contract is made cannot be deprived of the benefit of the contract to furnish medical attendance to a patient by the fact that he temporarily accompanies the patient into a state where he has no license and performs some services for the patient there. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

22. A contract to furnish one medical attendance during life for a lump sum payable at his death is not void as against public policy, either because furnishing an inducement to threaten his life or as a wagering contract. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

23. In determining the public policy of a state, courts are limited to a consideration of the statutes, Constitution, judicial decisions, and practice of government officers. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

24. A physician who enters into a contract with his patient is not bound, in order to sustain the validity of the contract, to show that the patient had independent and competent advice before executing the contract. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

25. The acceptance and use of a return pass by a shipper of stock who has been compelled to accompany the shipment, after the stock had been transported and delivered, cannot be held, as matter of law, to confirm a special written contract limiting the carrier's common-law liability, which had been extorted from the shipper, who rightfully declined to sign it, by means of a refusal to transport the cattle, which were already in the carrier's possession, unless such a contract was signed, although the pass was obtained under the terms of such voidable contract upon its surrender. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643.

26. To constitute an affirmance of a contract which a party has been wrongfully constrained to sign, the conduct of the injured party must be such as to indicate an intention to condone the wrong, and a purpose to abide by the consequences. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643.

27. Conduct exhibited in apparent recognition of a contract which a party has been wrongfully constrained to sign, while the pressure of the hardship which overcomes the mind continues, does not amount to an affirmance thereof. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643.

28. One who having received an assignment of claims by an employer of labor, in consideration of his furnishing funds with which to pay the laborers, gives a duebill in satisfaction of an order upon himself by the employer for wages due for cutting timber on government land, in consideration of which he requires an assignment by the servant of his claim against the master in order to defeat a right to assert a lien on the timber, cannot defeat liability thereon on the ground that the original contract was void, since his promise is a new and independent transaction, and not tainted by the illegality of the original agreement. Owens v. Davenport, 28: 996, 104 Pac. 682, 39 Mont. 555.

Performance; conditions; certificate of performance.

Admissibility in evidence of architect's certificate, see Evidence, 24.

29. An architect's certificate which a building contract provides shall be final and conclusive is so in legal effect unless impeached for fraud or such gross mistakes as would imply bad faith or a failure to exercise an honest judgment. Shriner v. Craft, 28: 450, 51 So. 884, — Ala. —.

Breach and its effect.

Cancellation of deed for breach of contract, see Cancellation of Instruments, 2.

Action for inducing breach of, see Case. Of condition subsequent, see Covenants and Conditions.

Damages for breach of, see Damages.

Breach of contract of sale, see Sale.

30. A contract to furnish medical attendance to a person is not broken by refusal to accompany him to another state, where the contract was made at his permanent place of residence and contains nothing to indicate any intention of a change of domicile. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

Defenses.

31. Failure to have an ordinance passed authorizing a frame building within the fire limits, so as to allow the work to be begun at a certain time, is no defense to an action for breach of a building contract, if the ordinance was in fact passed, and there is nothing to show that the building contract fixed any time when work should be commenced, or that there was any consideration for the agreement as to the ordinance. Shriner v. Craft, 28: 450, 51 So. 884, — Ala. —.

32. That a contract between physician and patient is presumptively fraudulent may be interposed as a defense in an action at law to enforce it. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

CONTRIBUTION.

Between indorsers, see Bills and Notes, 2.

CONVERSION.

By bailee, see Bailment.

Plea of, see Pleading, 7.

CORPORATION COMMISSION.

Review by courts of orders of, see Courts, 1.

Mandamus to compel compliance with orders of, see Parties, 2.

CORPORATIONS.

Enforcement against bankrupt of promise to return amount paid for stock of corporation if surrendered within certain time, see Bankruptcy, 5.

Necessity that subscriber sign written promise by promoter of corporation to pay for stock taken by subscriber upon its surrender within certain time, see Contracts, 14.

Rescission by infant of subscription to stock, see Infants.

Imposition of license tax on, see License, 1-6, 10-12.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus, 5.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

As to municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations.

Conditions on which railroad company receives its charter, see Railroads, 9.

Construction of railroad charter as to highway crossing, see Railroads, 8.

Taxation of franchise of, see Taxes, 1, 3.

Officers of a corporation who issued a fraudulent prospectus to sell treasury stock are not liable in damages for the fraud to one who, in reliance upon it, purchases from an individual stock which is owned by him, and in which the corporation has no interest. Cheney v. Dickinson, 28: 359, 172 Fed. 109, 98 C. C. A. 314. (Annotated).

CORPUS DELICTI.

Sufficiency of evidence to show, see Evidence, 56.

COSTS.

Allowing attorney's fee against defendant in action to enforce special assessment, see Constitutional Law, 3.

Refusal to divide costs does not constitute error, where the amount recovered by the plaintiff exceeds the amount for which defendant offered to confess judgment after the action was begun. Matheney v. Eldorado, 28: 980, 109 Pac. 166, 82 Kan. 720.

COTENANCY.

Sale by one tenant as agent for cotenant, see Principal and Agent, 3.

COUNTIES.

Execution of railroad aid bonds by, see Railroads, 1.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Liability of, to surety of tax collector for failing to require proper settlement of accounts, see Principal and Surety, 2, 3.

COURTS.

Jurisdiction of bankruptcy court, generally, see Bankruptcy, 1.

Jurisdiction to enjoin filing of rates of interstate commerce commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.

Amendment in exercise of original jurisdiction of alternative writ of mandamus, see Mandamus, 6.

Process of, see Writ and Process.

1. The determinations of a state railroad commission charged with control of the crossing of railroad tracks by street car lines, as to place, plan, and method of construction, are conclusive where the commissioner has not acted arbitrarily or capriciously in regard thereto. State ex rel. Dawson v. Parsons Street R. & E. Co. 28: 1082, 105 Pac. 704, 81 Kan. 430.

2. An order issued out of a suit founded on a creditors' bill in a Federal court, whereby the defendant is restrained from directly or indirectly selling, transferring, assigning, pledging, or otherwise disposing of, or parting with the possession or control of, any of the property, assets, notes, stocks, bonds, claims and demands of the debtor mentioned in the complaint, does not prevent the bringing of actions at law by the debtor to recover upon any of such notes and claims, as such order cannot be construed as requiring the debtor to allow the statute of limitations to run upon its causes of action. Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City S. R. Co. 28: 620, 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285.

3. An injunction will not issue out of the Federal court before which a suit founded on a creditors' bill is pending for misappropriation of corporate property, to stay subsequent actions at law instituted in a state court for the recovery of personal judgments upon a debt and certain notes involved in the former suit, where such subsequent actions will not prevent the effectual determination of the issues in the equity suit over which it had acquired exclusive jurisdiction, and will not withdraw or interfere with the dominion it had acquired over specific property to such an extent that its determination of the controversy about it and the enforcement of its decree concerning it may be in any degree prevented, notwithstanding the equitable remedy of an accounting would be more complete, prompt, and adequate, and it had been stipulated in the equitable action that a final settlement of the issues of indebtedness raised in the legal actions should be had therein. Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City S. R. Co. 28: 620, 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Restricting use or disposition of property.

Enforcement of, see infra, 3-7.

1. A covenant in a deed of conveyance whereby the grantor, in part consideration for the conveyance, stipulates and agrees for himself, his heirs, and assigns, concerning an adjacent lot which he then owns, that the only building upon such lot shall be a residence and the necessary attachments, and that it shall be used for no other purposes than that of a family residence, precludes the building for tenement purposes of several dwelling houses upon such adjacent lot. Brown v. Huber, 28: 705, 88 N. E. 322, 80 Ohio St. 183.

2. A limitation upon the power of alienation may be imposed upon a grant of a fee in trust for a married woman. Hauser v. St. Louis, 28: 426, 170 Fed. 906, 96 C. C. A. 82. (Annotated)

Performance; breach; enforcement.

Injunction to compel compliance with, see Injunction, 2, 3.

Joinder of parties to prevent violation of, see Parties, 1.

3. If changes from the building restrictions imposed upon lots in a subdivision, which affect only the buildings at corners of streets, are not of sufficient moment to interfere with the scheme as a whole, the owner of a particular lot cannot ignore the restrictions, under the rule of changed conditions. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

4. That no steps were taken to prevent the erection of a building in violation of a restrictive covenant upon the use of the land until it was all up will not defeat an injunction against its maintenance, if the complaining parties did not know of the violation of the covenant until the building was completed. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

5. A delay of ten weeks in bringing suit to enjoin the maintenance of a building erected in violation of a restrictive covenant in the use of the land, after the building was erected, and knowledge was brought home to the complaining party, is not such laches as will bar relief, if no prejudice to the rights of the owner of the building through the delay is shown. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

6. The restraint of substantial infraction of wholesome building covenants will not be denied because of possible slight infractions on the part of complainant, with respect to his own property, where his building has stood for more than forty years, and has been considered by all parties as a compliance with the restrictions. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

7. A mortgagee of real estate may maintain a suit to enjoin violation of a building restriction which has been imposed upon neighboring property for the benefit of that which is subject to his mortgage. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

Who liable or bound.

8. The vital question in an equitable action to enforce a restrictive covenant in a deed of conveyance, controlling the use or enjoyment of the land conveyed, is not whether there is a covenant running with the land, but whether the restriction asserted and relied on was one imposed upon the servient estate for the benefit of the land in behalf of which it is sought to be enforced. Brown v. Huber, 28: 705, 88 N. E. 322, 80 Ohio St. 183.

9. A covenant by a grantor whereby he stipulates and agrees for himself, his heirs, and assigns, that the only building upon an adjacent lot owned by him shall be a residence and the necessary attachments, and that it shall be used for no other purposes than that of a family residence, is binding upon one claiming under him, who took with notice thereof. Brown v. Huber, 28: 705, 88 N. E. 322, 80 Ohio St. 183.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Amendment of record on appeal in criminal prosecution, see Appeal and Error, 3.

Presumption that prisoner was in court when verdict was rendered, see Appeal and Error, 9.

Ex post facto law, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Evidence in criminal prosecution, see Evidence.

Presumption of innocence, see Evidence, 12.

As to sufficiency of indictment, see Indictment and Information.

Unreasonable searches and seizures, see Search and Seizure.

Directing acquittal, see Trial, 15.

See also Homicide; Intoxicating Liquors; Malicious Injury; Obstructing Justice; Receiving Stolen Property.

Capacity to commit.

1. That one accused of murder is a somnambulist, and while in this state is without self-control, and commits acts of which he has no recollection, and that his offense was committed while he was in that state, constitutes no defense other than that embraced in a plea of insanity. Tibbs v. Com. 28: 665, 128 S. W. 871, — Ky. —

Warrant; commitment.

2. A warrant issued by a coroner pursuant to a statute requiring him, upon the rendition by the coroner's jury of a verdict of guilty, to issue his warrant for the arrest of the accused, and providing that such warrant shall take the place of a complaint and be sufficient foundation for a preliminary examination before a magistrate, is sufficient authority for the holding of such examination, notwithstanding another statute providing that a written complaint under oath shall be filed with the magistrate before a warrant shall issue. State v. Brecount, 28: 187, 107 Pac. 763, 82 Kan. 195.

CROSS APPEALS.

See Appeal and Error, 6.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Of witness, see Appeal and Error, 26; Witnesses, 3.

CUSTOM.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 39.

DAMAGES.

Interest on amount recovered as, see Interest.

Damages for flooding of land by government dam, see Damages, 6.

Sales of personalty.

See also infra, 7.

1. The measure of damages for refusal to ship a car load of shingles according to contract is the difference between the contract price and their value at the date of the seller's refusal to comply with a demand for performance. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28: 1007, 108 Pac. 621, — Wash. —

Failure in duty to passenger.

2. Counsel fees are not a proper element 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of compensatory damages in an action for wrongful ejection from a street car. United Power Co. v. Matheny, 28: 761, 90 N. E. 154, 81 Ohio St. 204. (Annotated)

Personal injuries; death.

New trial because of inadequacy of, see Appeal and Error, 33; New Trial, 1.

Relevancy of evidence as to, see Evidence, 43.

3. An award of $30,000 to a miner, twenty-four years old when injured, and who was earning about $150 per month, will be reduced on appeal to $22,000, although the lower part of his body is paralyzed so that he can move about only on crutches and has no control over his bowels and urinary organs, where the testimony shows that time may effect a slight improvement in his condition. McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 28: 1244, 104 Pac. 801, 55 Wash. 495.

Injury to real property; trees.

Relevancy of evidence as to, see Evidence, 43.

Who entitled to, as between vendor and purchaser, see Trial, 17.

4. The measure of damages for permanent injuries to lands caused by the construction thereon of a public improvement without right, which injuries do not totally destroy such lands, is the difference between the actual cash value thereof at the time immediately preceding the injury and the actual cash value immediately after the injury, with legal interest thereon to the time of trial. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

5. The measure of damages for the wrongful destruction of shade trees, the separable and independent value of which is nominal, is the difference between the value of the land before and after the destruction. Cleveland School Dist. v. Great Northern R. Co. 28: 757, 126 N. W. 995, — N. D. — (Annotated)

Eminent domain cases.

6. The owner of a farm, a part of which is permanently flooded by a government dam, must be compensated, in addition to the value of the land taken, for the lessened value of the farm, caused by the consequent cutting off of a private way across the lands of others, which is the only practicable outlet from the farm to the county road. United States v. Welch, 28: 385, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527, 217 U. S. 333, 54 L. ed. 787. (Annotated)

Loss of profits.

7. The recoverable damages for breach of an executory contract to purchase stock goods to be manufactured are the lost profits on the contract, which are the difference between the agreed price and the fair market value of the goods at the time of the breach and the place for delivery, or, in case there is no market value at such place, some other place just to the vendee. Lincoln v. Charles Alshuler Mfg. Co. 28: 780, 125 N. W. 908, 142 Wis. 475.

DEATH.

- Presumption of, see Evidence, 7-9.
- Presumption as to cause of, see Evidence, 13.
- Evidence of letters of inquiry in regard to absentee, see Evidence, 48.
- Sufficiency of evidence to establish, see Evidence, 54.
- Liability for, under policy insuring against permanent disability, see Insurance, 11.
- Proof of death of absentee, see Witnesses, 5.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

- Insolvency of debtor, see Bankruptcy.

DECEIT.

- See Fraud and Deceit.

DECREE.

- See Judgment.

DEEDS.

- Cancellation of, see Cancellation of Instruments, 2.
- As to covenants, see Covenants and Conditions.
- Estate conveyed by deed in trust for married woman, see Husband and Wife.
- Tax deed, see Taxes, 5, 6.

Description of parties.

A mere restraint on alienation is not sufficient to cause the word "heirs" in a grant to one and his heirs to be construed as meaning "children," so as to limit the interest of the first taker to a life estate. Hauser v. St. Louis, 28: 426, 170 Fed. 906, 96 C. C. A. 82.

DEFEASIBLE FEE.

- Creation of by will, see Wills, 8.

DEFENDANTS.

- Parties defendant, see Parties, 2-5.

DEFENSE.

- Error in entertaining motion to strike out separate offense, see Appeal and Error, 20.
- In action on negotiable paper, see Bills and Notes, 5, 6.
- To liability on contracts, generally, see Contracts, 31, 32.
- To criminal prosecution, see Criminal Law, 1.
- Burden of establishing, see Evidence, 2.
- To enforcement of covenant, see Injunction, 2.
- To liability on insurance policy, see Insurance, 9, 13.
- In libel suit, see Libel and Slander, 3.
- To liability for special assessment, see Limitation of Actions, 5.
- Striking out immaterial defense, see Pleading 3.

DEFINITENESS.

- Of contracts, see Contracts, 8.
- 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

DELAY.

- In transmission of telegrams, see Telegraphs.

DELEGATION.

- Of master's duty to independent contractor, see Master and Servant, 24-26.

DELIVERY.

- By carrier, see Carriers, 11.
- Of personalty sold, see Sale, 1, 2.

DEMAND.

- As condition precedent to right of action, see Action or Suit, 1.
- Necessity of making demand for performance of option within reasonable time, see Contracts, 10.

DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

- See Evidence, 29.

DEMURRER.

- See Pleading, 9, 10.

DEPOSITIONS.

- Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 25-27.
- Supplying loss of suppressed deposition by cross-examination of opposite party, see Witnesses, 3.

DESCRIPTION.

- Of beneficiaries in will, see Wills, 5, 6.

DEVISE.

- See Wills.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

- Construction of motion for, see Motions and Orders.
- In general, see Trial, 14, 15.

DIRECTORS.

- Imputing knowledge of, to bank, see Notice, 1.

DISCHARGE.

- Of employee, see Assumpsit, 1.
- In bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy, 6-9.
- Of mortgage, see Mortgage.

DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

- Certiorari to review order of inspection, see Certiorari.

A statute empowering a court to order an inspection of papers, and to enforce the order by contempt proceedings, does not apply to papers which are of such a private nature as not to be receivable in evidence. State ex rel. Seattle General Contract Co. v. Superior Court, 28: 516, 106 Pac. 150, 56 Wash. 649.

DISCREDITING.

- Of witnesses, see Witnesses, 4-6.

DISCRETION.

- Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 12.

DISCRIMINATION.

In license tax, see License, 8, 9.
In taxes generally, see Texas, 1.

DISMISSAL.

Of cross appeal, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Of condemnation proceeding, see Eminent Domain.

On demurrer to petition, see Estoppel, 4.

1. One who contracts to perform work for a railroad company cannot complain that an action against him and the railroad company for compensation alleged to be due a subcontractor was dismissed in favor of the railroad company, and permitted to go to verdict against him alone. Evans v. Oregon & W. R. Co. 28: 455, 108 Pac. 1095, — Wash. —.

2. The striking out of an improper party does not work a discontinuance of the case. Shriner v. Craft, 28: 450, 51 So. 884, — Ala. —.

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Change of decree for alimony as impairment of contract obligation, see Constitutional Law, 10, 11.

A husband and wife lived together in the state within the meaning of a statute making that fact a prerequisite to jurisdiction of the state courts over a divorce proceeding, where they came into the state with the intention of making their home there, and after remaining a few days looking for apartments selected one and sent their belongings there, although before taking up a residence in the apartment, the husband left the state on business and never returned. Winans v. Winans, 28: 992, 91 N. E. 394, 205 Mass. 388.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 24-28.

DOGS.

See Animals.

DOMICIL.

Presumption as to domicile of unmarried son, see Evidence, 5.

DOUBLE TAXATION.

By imposition of license tax, see License, 6.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Validity of statute providing for front-foot assessment to pay for, see Constitutional Law, 9.

DROWNING.

Of person caused by log jam in stream, see Logs and Logging.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law.

DUES.

Of members of social clubs, see Clubs.
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

DURESS.

Estoppel to avoid contract for, see Estoppel, 5.

A special written contract limiting a carrier's common-law liability which has been extorted from a shipper who rightfully declined to sign it, by means of a refusal to transport cattle already in the carrier's possession, unless such a contract was signed, is voidable at the shipper's election. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643. (Annotated)

DYING DECLARATIONS.

Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 38.

DYNAMITE.

Presumption that explosion of, was cause of death, see Evidence, 13.

Death of employee caused by explosion of, see Evidence, 51, 52; Master and Servant, 4, 5; Proximate Cause, 3; Trial, 7, 8.

EJECTION.

Of passenger, see Carriers, 4; Evidence, 41.

EJECTMENT.

Service of summons in, as arresting running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 6.

Waiver of remedy in, and suit upon implied contract, see Contracts, 3.

One in lawful possession of land under a tax-sale certificate, who has made valuable improvements, cannot be evicted by the landowner, who has redeemed the land, until paid for the improvements. McDonald v. Kelson, 28: 1080, 98 Pac. 772, 79 Kan. 105.

ELECTION.

By devisee under will, see Parties, 5; Wills, 10.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

As to estoppel by inconsistent acts or claims in judicial proceedings, see Estoppel, 3, 4.

ELECTIONS.

1. The name of a registered voter whose registration papers have been destroyed by fire must, upon application by him made at any time before the forty-eight hours preceding the opening of the polls, be placed on the new registry list, without requiring him to register anew, where the poll books are not required by statute to be sent to the polls until forty-eight hours before the opening thereof, notwithstanding a statute prohibiting a registrar from placing the name of a voter on his register within thirty days of the election for which the registration is made, since such a voter is not, by the destruction of the registry list, placed in the category of one who has not registered. State ex rel. Reid v. Lebleu, 28: 989, 52 So. 849, 126 La. —.

2. A voter, by stamping a cross in a circle at the top of a column, under a party device, votes for all the candidates in such column, under a statute providing that a voter desiring to vote a straight ticket may stamp a cross in a circle under the device and in the column, above the candidates of the party for whom he desires to vote, and that such ballot shall be counted for all the candidates in the column, although he also stamps a cross in a circle opposite all of the names in such column except one, as the extra markings are without effect, the statute being mandatory. Potts v. Folsom, 28: 460, 104 Pac. 353, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

ELECTRICITY.

Negligence of physician in use of, see Physicians and Surgeons, 2.

1. It is the duty of an electric light and power company having heavily charged wires suspended over a street upon which the moving of buildings of greater height than the wires is reasonably to be anticipated, to insulate the wires, or to take such other precautions as are necessary to guard against injury to one who is liable to be upon a building being so moved, and to be brought in contact with such wires, for a breach of which duty, resulting in injury, the company is liable, in the absence of contributory negligence upon the part of the injured party. Winegarner v. Edison Light & P. Co. 28: 677, 109 Pac. 778, — Kan. —.

2. An electric light and power company which, pursuant to a right granted by its franchise, maintains heavily charged electric wires over a street, and the employee of one who, pursuant to a license, is, to, the knowledge of the electric company, moving a building of greater height than such wires upon such street, are not licensees as to each other, so as to relieve the electric company of its duty to have its wires in a condition safe for the house mover's employee to handle. Winegarner v. Edison Light & P. Co. 28: 677, 109 Pac. 778, — Kan. —.

3. An electric railway company maintaining an unprotected third rail carrying a heavy current, on its right of way at a point where the right of way is securely fenced against intruders, is not liable for injury to a child who wanders through a gate maintained in the fence by an abutting property owner, and comes in contact with such rail, although there is nothing to distinguish the dangerous rail from the harmless ones. Riedel v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. 28: 98, 177 Fed. 374, — C. C. A. —.

(Annotated)

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Contract to pay bonus to, see Contracts, 8, 18, 19; Evidence, 34.

EMERY WHEELS.

Master's duty to guard, see Master and Servant, 6, 7, 20.
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Implied agreement of railroad to pay for land taken without first securing right, see Contracts, 3.

As to measure of damages, see Damages, 6.

A municipal corporation may dismiss proceedings to condemn land for a street after a verdict assessing damages for the land taken, if the benefits assessed did not equal the damages awarded as required by statute, so that the right of the property owner has not become complete and no process remains by which the verdict can be corrected. District of Columbia v. Hess, 28: 91, 35 App. D. C. 38.

(Annotated)

EQUALITY.

In license tax, see License, 8, 9.

In taxation, see Taxes, 1.

EQUAL PROTECTION AND PRIVILEGES.

See Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

EQUITY.

Review of decision in, see Appeal and Error, 18, 19.

Error in transferring action to chancery court, see Appeal and Error, 22.

As to cancelation of instruments, generally, see Cancelation of Instruments.

Admissibility of depositions in equitable proceeding, see Evidence, 25.

As to injunction, see Injunction.

As to reformation of instruments, see Reformation of Instruments.

1. Equity has jurisdiction of a suit to compel the removal of a structure from a sidewalk, which the owner claims the right to maintain under the authority of the municipality. New York v. Rice, 28: 375, 91 N. E. 283, 198 N. Y. 124.

Mistake as basis of jurisdiction.

Sufficiency of plea of mistake as against demurrer, see Pleading, 10.

2. An honest mistake of law on the part of both contracting parties, as to the effect of an instrument, which operates as a gross injustice to one party and gives an unconscionable advantage to the other, is one against which equity will afford relief. Dolvin v. American Harrow Co. 28: 785, 54 S. E. 706, 125 Ga. 699.

(Annotated)

To avoid multiplicity of suits.

3. A bill in equity will not lie in behalf of a receiver of a club against its members to recover from them dues owing under its by-law, and the purchase money of supplies received from it, since the claims are cognizable at law, and are not common in such sense that they can be joined to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Rogers v. Boston Club, 28: 743, 91 N. E. 321, 205 Mass. 261.

4. Claims by the receiver of a social club against its members for unpaid dues cannot be joined in an equity proceeding against all to prevent a multiplicity of suits, but must be enforced by separate actions at law. Rogers v. Boston Club, 28: 743, 91 N. E. 321, 205 Mass. 261.

(Annotated)

Retaining jurisdiction.

5. A chancery court having assumed jurisdiction of a suit involving the right to compel a beneficiary under a will to elect between the provision in his favor and a claim to property covered by the will which he alleges belonged to him may retain the case to settle the amount of mesne profits to which he is entitled and the amount to be allowed those who had been in possession for betterments. McDonald v. Shaw, 28: 657, 121 S. W. 935, 92 Ark. 15.

ESTATE.

Created by will, see Wills, 7-9.

ESTOPPEL.

To raise question on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 11.

To restrain violation of restrictive covenant, see Covenants and Conditions, 4.

Burden of establishing, see Evidence, 2.

To object to admission of deposition, see Trial, 1.

Of municipality.

1. A municipal corporation which appoints a superintendent to supervise the building of a bridge for it, and accepts the work done under his supervision as well as the bridge, is estopped thereafter to deny liability for such work and bridge, because of irregularity in the appointment of the superintendent. Matheny v. Eldorado, 28: 980, 109 Pac. 166, 82 Kan. 720.

By laches, silence, or acquiescence.

2. Although acquiescence of a landowner in the construction of a railway on his land would preclude him from thereafter maintaining ejectment and from obtaining an injunction, it does not divest him of the title to the property taken, and is not inconsistent with an assumption on his part that the company would pay him a reasonable compensation therefor, and his consequent right to recover such compensation upon failure or refusal of the company so to recompense. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

By inconsistency in acts or claims.

3. An assertion made by a litigant as a part of his defense to an action on a promissory note, that he is indebted thereon to a third person, not a party to the action, is not conclusive upon such litigant, when subsequently sued upon the note by such third person. First Nat. Bank v. Duncan, 28: 327, 101 Pac. 992, 80 Kan. 196.

(Annotated)

4. A theory of law advanced by counsel for the defendant on the argument in an action wherein a demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the case thereupon dismissed without prejudice, at the request of the plaintiff, is not conclusive upon such defendant in a subsequent action involving the same matter between the same parties. First Nat. Bank v. Duncan, 28: 327, 101 Pac. 992, 80 Kan. 196.

By receiving benefits.

5. A party cannot voluntarily act upon a contract which he has been wrongfully constrained to sign, and voluntarily take the benefit of it, and then avoid it for duress. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643.

Who affected.

6. A man whose participation in an act of mortgage by his wife of her separate property is shown only by a recital that came the said woman, wife of the said husband, "herein joined, aided, and authorized by her husband," will not be held to have consented to the inclusion in the mortgage of his separate property so that it will be bound thereby as against the claim of his subsequent mortgagee, although he may be personally estopped to deny that it is included. W. F. Taylor Co. v. Sample, 28: 289, 48 So. 439, 122 La. 1016.

(Annotated)

EVIDENCE.

Review on appeal of admission of hearsay evidence, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Curing of error in exclusion of, see Appeal and Error, 15.

Grant of continuance to secure testimony, see Continuance and Adjournment.

Judicial notice.

1. To warrant a judgment in a proceeding commenced by attachment, the attachment and return need not be offered in evidence, since the court may take judicial notice of them. Slater v. Roche, 28: 702, 126 N. W. 925, — Iowa, —.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Presumptions on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 7-9.

Presumption of reasonableness of demand in mandamus case, see Mandamus, 7, 8.

Presumptive invalidity of contract as defense in action to enforce it, see Contracts, 32.

Sufficiency of presumption to take case to jury, see Trial, 3, 5.

2. The burden is upon the party who relies upon estoppel to prove clearly and unequivocally every fact essential to the estoppel. Kroll v. Close, 28: 571, 92 N. E. 29, 82 Ohio St. 190.

3. The burden of proving the existence of a confidential or fiduciary relation between brothers is upon the party asserting the existence of such relationship. Crawford v. Crawford, 28: 353, 67 S. E. 673, — Ga. —.

4. No presumption of a confidential or fiduciary relation between brothers arises from the fact of their relation, or from the facts that one is six years the senior of the other, that they were reared together, and that one attended a school taught by the other. Crawford v. Crawford, 28: 353, 67 S. E. 673, — Ga. —.

5. The home of his widowed mother will be presumed to be that of an unmarried son who, upon reaching majority, goes away to work, but makes such home his headquarters, in the absence of anything to show an intention to change it to another place. Miller v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 28: 178, 122 N. W. 1126, 140 Wis. 505.

6. The identity of the several separate sheets of a will offered for probate is prima facie established where each sheet but the last, which bears the signature of the testator, with an incomplete sentence, and such parts when properly arranged effect a complete subject-matter. Kirby v. Sellards, 28: 270, 108 Pac. 73, 82 Kan. 291.

7. Proof of diligent search and inquiry is not required to establish the presumption of death when a person has absented himself from his home or place of residence for seven years. Miller v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 28: 178, 122 N. W. 1126, 140 Wis. 505.

(Annotated)

8. The relatives of one who disappeared without explanation, and has remained absent from home for more than seven years, are not bound to follow up intelligence of a tangible and definite character as to his whereabouts to avoid its rebutting the presumption of death, if the source from which it comes is so corrupt and unreliable as to destroy its value. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

9. Mere failure of the relatives of one who disappeared without explanation, and remained absent from home for more than seven years, to follow up rumors that he had been seen in different places, and institute diligent inquiry in such places for him, is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of death arising from such absence. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

10. Attorneys who purchase from their clients, and resell the subject-matter of their employment, have the burden of proving, when sued by their clients for the resulting profits, that the original purchase price was fair. Hamilton v. Allen, 28: 723, 125 N. W. 610, 86 Neb. 401.

(Annotated)

11. That a will is drafted by a daughter of the testator, and that she is named therein as the executrix, does not raise a presumption of undue influence, where she is otherwise merely equally favored with the other children. Kirby v. Sellards, 28: 270, 108 Pac. 73, 82 Kan. 291. (Annotated) 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

12. The presumption of innocence of one on trial for a crime is one of fact and of law, and no person can be convicted, even under a joint information, without proof of his individual guilt. High v. State, 28: 162, 101 Pac. 115, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 161.

13. The absence of direct evidence as to the cause of the death of an employee whose body was found near a building in which dynamite had been stored will not prevent a finding by the jury that it was caused by an explosion of dynamite by a lightning stroke, if known facts point to that inference. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

14. Failure of a device installed by a master to stop machinery in case a servant becomes caught therein to work when the need of it arises is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master. Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28: 1207, 126 S. W. 1037, 227 Mo. 347.

15. The mere exclamation of a track hand immediately after he had dropped his corner of a hand car which a repair gang was removing from the track, that he did not mean to do so, is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of negligence arising from his act. Cahill v. Illinois C. R. Co. 28: 1121, 125 N. W. 331, — Iowa, —.

16. The mere fact that a railroad bridge was carried away by the high water of the creek which it spanned, taking with it a portion of a train, and killing a brakeman, does not place upon the railroad company the burden of disproving its negligence to avoid liability for the death of the employee. Johns v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 28: 597, 75 Atl. 408, 226 Pa. 319. (Annotated)

17. The fall of a scaffold upon which men are sent to work does not of itself show that it must have fallen because something was the matter with it, where it appears that at the time of the fall the men were trying to break the connection of a pipe, and were pressing against the scaffold with all their strength, which may have subjected it to excessive strain. Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co. 28: 586, 86 N. E. 805, 194 N. Y. 37. (Annotated)

18. A telephone company is bound to negative only the negligence charged against it, where specific acts of negligence are charged in the complaint for failure promptly to make a connection for a customer, although the statute provides that in case of delay it has the burden of proof that such delay was not due to negligence on its part. Volquardsen v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 28: 554, 126 N. W. 923, — Iowa, —.

19. Where a hired horse injured while in possession of the bailee was at the time in charge of a driver furnished by the owner, the bailee is not bound to establish his freedom from negligence in the first instance, but the burden of showing his negligence is on the owner. Weller v. Camp, 28: 1106, 52 So. 929, — Ala. —.

20. One who desires a decree setting aside a deed of real estate because a portion of it was secured by false representations to apply only to such portion, upon return of a proportionate part of the purchase money, must offer evidence which will enable the court to make an apportionment, and upon his failure to do so, the court may deal with the transaction as an entirety. Kathan v. Comstock, 28: 201, 122 N. W. 1044, 140 Wis. 427.

21. Unimproved and unoccupied land is deemed to be in possession of the holder of the legal title. Butler v. Smith, 28: 436, 120 N. W. 1106, 84 Neb. 78.

22. A legal and valid conveyance of real estate by tax deed carries with it a prima facie right of possession, and, where the property is vacant and unoccupied, the constructive possession of the premises is deemed to be in the holder of such title. Steltz v. Morgan, 28: 398, 101 Pac. 1057, 10 Idaho, 368.

Best and secondary.

23. The material contents of an existing book which is obtainable cannot be proven by parol testimony, as the book itself is the best evidence. Sayre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

Documentary evidence.

Right to object to admission of deposition, see Trial, 1.

Supplying loss of suppressed deposition by cross examination of party, see Witnesses, 3.

24. An architect's certificate provided for by a building contract is admissible in evidence in an action for breach of the contract. Shriner v. Craft, 28: 450, 51 So. 884, — Ala. —.

25. Depositions may be used in the consideration by the probate court of claims against a decedent's estate, where the statutes provide for the taking of depositions in suits at law and that contested claims shall be tried in the probate court as other suits at law. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

26. A deposition which contains competent evidence as to matters in issue at the time it was taken cannot be suppressed, in whole or in part, after trial begun on an amended declaration, on the ground that such amended declaration put in issue additional matter, where it also sets up, in part at least, the same matter as to which the deposition contained competent evidence. Sayre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

27. A deposition which contains competent evidence on matters in issue at the time it was taken was not rendered inadmissible as to such evidence, by the fact that the amended declaration, on which the trial was had, put in issue matter in addition to that as to which the deposition contained competent evidence. Sayre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

28. Notes executed subsequent to the alleged assignment, by the payee thereof, of 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

other notes to the maker of such subsequent notes, which were discounted and paid, are admissible in an action for an accounting as to the prior notes, which had been redelivered to the assignor for collection, as tending to discredit the assignment to the plaintiff of the notes as to which an accounting is demanded. Sayre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

Demonstrative evidence.

29. That a sciagraph of an injured hip was taken five years after the injury does not render it inadmissible in evidence upon the question of the character of the injury. Bonnet v. Foote, 28: 136, 107 Pac. 252, 47 Colo. 282.

Parol.

See also supra, 23.

30. Parol evidence is not admissible to vary the specific terms as to the time at which an obligation becomes due. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

31. Where one devises a portion of his estate and there is property upon which the will can operate, evidence is not admissible for the purpose of enlarging the devise so as to include property belonging to another. McDonald v. Shaw, 28: 657, 121 S. W. 935, 92 Ark. 15.

32. Parol evidence is not admissible to show that testator did not intend an instrument executed in pursuance of the formal requirements of the statute of wills to be a will. Re Kennedy, 28: 417, 124 N. W. 516, 159 Mich. 548. (Annotated)

33. As between a bank holding a note and its immediate indorser in blank, parol evidence is admissible to show that he indorsed as its agent to transfer title to the note, including the fact that he sold certain property to the bank to be sold to the maker, and that the note was taken in his name and indorsed to the bank merely for its accommodation in the transaction. First Nat. Bank v. Reinman, 28: 530, 125 S. W. 443, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

34. Parol evidence is admissible to explain what is meant by the term "other consideration" in a contract whereby a landowner agrees to pay a bonus to a railway company in consideration of $1 and other consideration. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

Opinions and conclusions.

35. Upon the question of negligence on the part of a bailee of a horse, which resulted in its injury, opinion evidence is not admissible as to whether or not the vehicle was properly loaded and the driver was acting under the direction of the bailee, such questions being for the decision of the jury. Weller v. Camp, 28: 1106, 52 So. 929, — Ala. —.

Hearsay; declarations: res gestæ.

36. One receiving upon a trial the benefit of a declaration of an absent witness through the admission of his opponent that he had heard of it takes it subject to the same conditions and limitations which would attach to it had the declarant been called as a witness. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

37. In defense of a prosecution for forgery of a will, evidence is admissible of declarations of the testator indicating an intent to execute a will of the tenor of that alleged to have been forged, if made at a period not so remote from the date of the will as to render them immaterial. State v. Ready (N. J. Err. & App.) 28: 240, 75 Atl. 564, — N. J. —. (Annotated)

38. That at the time of making a declaration declarant stated that he did not expect to live does not render the declaration admissible in evidence as a dying declaration, if all his other conversations and acts tend to show that he did not expect to die. Tibbs v. Com. 28: 665, 128 S. W. 871, — Ky. —.

Relevancy and materiality.

Relevancy and materiality under particular pleading, see infra, 57.

Evidence to discredit witness, see Witnesses, 4-6.

39. Parol testimony of usage or custom, either general in the community or special between the people engaged in the particular trade or business, is not admissible to show that an unconditional acceptance of an order to ship goods was subject to the exigencies of transportation and to the further condition that if the goods could not be shipped within a reasonable time the contract was no longer to be obligatory. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28: 1007, 108 Pac. 621, — Wash. —.

40. A question propounded plaintiff in an action for an accounting for notes delivered to defendant's intestate for collection, as to whether certain items in an account previously rendered defendant and offered in evidence by him represented or was intended to represent the notes as to which an accounting was demanded, was properly rejected, as the question of plaintiff's intent was not material, and it was for the court, or the jury instructed by the court, to determine whether the declaration or any of the items in the account were supported by the evidence. Sayre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

41. Evidence tending to show that passengers left a street car because of the conduct of other passengers, and that in so doing they complained to the conductor or within his hearing of such conduct, is admissible in an action by the latter passengers to recover damages for unlawful ejection from the car, as part of the res gesta, and as tending to explain the motive of the conductor, irrespective of whether or not such complaints were made within the hearing of the ejected passengers. United Power Co. v. Matheny, 28: 761, 90 N. E. 154, 81 Ohio St. 204.
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

42. Evidence of the prices realized upon a resale by attorneys at a large profit of an undivided half interest in land subject to a life estate, purchased from their clients, is admissible in a suit by the clients to recover the profits realized by such resale, and may be considered in determining whether the price paid by the attorneys was fair, where their witnesses have testified to the changes in value in the meantime, and that the undivided interest had no market value at the time of the original purchase. Hamilton v. Allen, 28: 723, 125 N. W. 610, 86 Neb. 101.

43. Testimony as to the actual market value of shade trees is not admissible on the question of damages, in an action for their destruction, as the damages are measured by the deterioration in the value of the land. Cleveland School Dist. v. Great Northern R. Co. 28: 757, 126 N. W. 995, — N. D. —.

44. Evidence of the shortening of the leg is admissible upon the question of damages in an action against a surgeon for negligent failure properly to diagnose a fracture of the neck of the femur, where there is sufficient evidence in the case to establish the negligence. Bonnet v. Foote, 28: 136, 107 Pac. 252, 47 Colo. 282.

45. Evidence of the result of an examination of a hip, made five years after defendant was called upon to treat it, is admissible in an action against him for malpractice in failing to discover that it was fractured, in corroboration of evidence that its condition immediately after the injury tended to show a fracture. Bonnet v. Foote, 28: 136, 107 Pac. 252, 47 Colo. 282.

46. Evidence of an examination of the foundation of a bridge which gave way, made five months after the accident, when conditions had so far changed that it could not be relied on as proof of the conditions existing before the bridge fell, is not admissible upon the question of negligence in the construction or maintenance of the bridge. Johns v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 28: 591, 75 Atl. 408, 226 Pa. 319.

47. One suing for slander in being charged by another with setting fire to his building cannot be permitted to testify that he never made threats to burn the building for the purpose of contradicting witnesses who have testified that they communicated to defendant, before the fire, the fact that they had heard plaintiff make such threats. Edwards v. Kevil, 28: 551, 118 S. W. 273, 133 Ky. 392.

48. Evidence of having written letters subsequent to the commencement of an action on a policy of insurance upon the life of one who disappeared without explanation, and has not been heard from for more than seven years, making inquiry as to the presence of the insured in a certain place within the seven years, and about the time an informant claimed to have seen him there, is admissible in the action. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

Weight and sufficiency.

Review of facts on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 16-19.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see Trial, 3-5.

Sufficiency of, to justify direction of verdict, see Trial, 14.

49. The jury is not absolutely bound by the testimony of a witness, although it is not contradicted by direct evidence, where the evidence itself indicates that it is unworthy of belief. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

50. The jury may find negligence where one of the men lifting a hand car from the track prematurely drops it without warning, to the injury of a coservant, in violation of the custom not to drop the car until ordered to do so after all are ready to act together. Cahill v. Illinois C. R. Co. 28: 1121, 125 N. W. 331, — Iowa, —.

51. To maintain an action for the death of an employee through the explosion of dynamite negligently stored in a room provided for his use, plaintiff is not bound to demonstrate the manner in which the explosives were ignited. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

52. A master may be found to be negligent in using a single room of a small shanty for the convenience and shelter of workmen, for the storage of dynamite, and for the installation of a telephone, the electricity from the wires of which may cause an explosion of the dynamite. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

53. Evidence of witnesses that they did not hear signals given by a railroad train for a street crossing will not establish negligence on the part of the railroad company where the train operatives testify positively that they were given. Anspach v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 28: 382, 74 Atl. 373, 225 Pa. 528.

54. One seeking to recover on a policy of insurance upon the life of one who disappeared without explanation, and has been absent from home for more than seven years, is not bound to satisfy the jury of his death beyond a reasonable doubt, a preponderance of evidence being sufficient. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

55. The presence of blood in the urine does not constitute sufficient evidence of a complete parting or solution of the covering or skin of the kidney to sustain a conviction of statutory wounding. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 295, — W. Va. —.

56. The proof of corpus delicti is not sufficient to support a conviction of larceny, where it merely shows that certain goods, formerly part of the stock of a merchant, were found in possession of accused, without anything to show that they were stolen, or were not sold in due course of trade. Sanders v. State, 28: 536, 52 So. 417, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

Admissibility under particular pleadings.

57. In an action on an insurance policy which required arbitration of loss in case of dispute as a condition precedent to suit thereon, the insured, under a petition alleging due performance of the conditions of the policy on his part, and a general denial by way of reply to an answer alleging that a dispute arose as to the amount of loss and that the same had never been appraised as provided by the policy, may prove that he appointed an appraiser in good faith, and that the two appraisers were unable to agree upon an umpire, for which reason no appraisal was made. German-American Ins. Co. v. Jerrils, 28: 104, 108 Pac. 114, 82 Kan. 320.

EXAMINATION.

Of witnesses, see Witnesses, 2, 3.

EXCEPTIONS.

To raise question on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 5.

In general, see Trial, 1, 2.

EXECUTION.

1. A writ of fieri facias in the hands of an officer for execution is, under a statute providing that an execution shall be a lien "upon all the personal estate of which the judgment debtor is possessed, or to which he is entitled," a lien upon a legacy given to the debtor, although it is in the hands of the executor. Park v. McCauley, 28: 1036, 67 S. E. 174, — W. Va. —.

2. W. Va. Code 1906, chap. 141, § 2, providing that notice of the issuance and placing in the hands of an officer of an execution is sufficient to fix liability on one owing money to a judgment debtor, is not modified by § 11 thereof, providing that, if such third person is liable at the time of the service on him of a summons to answer a suggestion to enforce the execution lien, he shall be required to pay, so as to relieve from liability one who, with notice of the issuance and placing in the hands of the officer of an execution against a judgment debtor, paid the judgment debt or before issuance of the suggestion and summons to answer it, since the latter section does not create a lien, but merely provides a method of enforcing the antecedent lien of the execution. Park v. McCauley, 28: 1036, 67 S. E. 174, — W. Va. —.

3. An execution issued upon a judgment rendered in a justice of the peace court, although not a court of record, has the same effect as a lien as one issued from a court of record, notwithstanding a statute expressly controlling justices' courts; and a contrary intent is not shown by a statute providing for the filing in a specified court of record of a transcript of the justice's docket, and the issuing of execution thereon with like effect as of a judgment of that court, since such statute merely provides a discretionary method of issuing execution. Park v. McCauley, 28: 1036, 67 S. E. 174, — W. Va. —.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Review of facts upon appeal from allowance of claim against decedent's estate, see Appeal and Error, 19.

Review on appeal of allowance for funeral expenses, see Appeal and Error, 12.

Reducing on appeal allowance for funeral expenses, see Appeal and Error, 32.

Use of depositions in consideration of claims against decedent's estate, see Evidence, 25.

Execution as lien upon legacy in hands of executor, see Execution, 1.

Binding effect on persons not parties of decree settling executor's accounts, see Judgment, 4.

1. An executor who, under the mistaken belief that the estate is solvent, pays a claim in full, may, upon ascertaining the fact of its insolvency, recover the excess over the portion equitably due the claimant. Woodruff v. H. B. Clafin Co. 28: 440, 91 N. E. 1103, 198 N. Y. 470. (Annotated)

2. That the executor, after paying a claim against the estate in full, carries on decedent's business for a time at a loss, does not prevent his recovering the overpayment in case the estate proves to be insolvent, if it is not made to appear that such conduct in any manner affected the respective rights or relations of the executor and claimant. Woodruff v. H. B. Clafin Co. 28: 440, 91 N. E. 1103, 198 N. Y. 470.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Of bottle of carbonated beverage, see Trial, 4, 5.

Negligence of master in storage of explosives, see Evidence, 13, 51, 52; Master and Servant, 4, 5; Proximate Cause, 3; Trial, 7, 8.

EX POST FACTO LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 1.

EXTENSION.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 3, 4.

FACTS.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 16-19.

FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

See Fraud and Deceit.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

Assumption of risk of negligence of, see Master and Servant, 15.

In general, see Master and Servant 17, 18.

Who are, see Master and Servant, 19, 20.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

FIDUCIARY RELATION.

Of real estate agent, see Brokers.

Necessity that patient have independent advice in making contract with physician for services, see Contracts, 24.

Burden of proving existence of, between brothers, see Evidence, 3, 4.

FIERI FACIAS.

See Execution.

FINALITY OF DECISION.

For purpose of appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1.

FINDINGS.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 18, 19.

By court, see Trial, 21.

By jury, see Trial, 22, 23.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Mandamus to mayor to compel suspension of chief of, see Mandamus, 1, 2.

FIRE ESCAPES.

Negligence of independent contractor erecting, see Master and Servant, 25, 26.

Master's duty to inspect fire escapes erected by independent contractor, see Trial, 11.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

FIRES.

Injunction to compel municipality to extinguish fire in mine, see Injunction, 1.

Proximate cause of loss by, see Proximate Cause, 1.

FIXED LIABILITY.

What constitutes fixed liability against bankrupt, see Bankruptcy, 5.

FIXTURES.

Tenant's rights as to, see Landlord and Tenant.

FLOOD.

Destruction by, of property in hands of carriers, see Carriers, 11.

FLOOD WATERS.

Duty of builder of bridge to provide for, see Trial, 18; Waters, 4.

F. O. B.

F. O. B. sale, see Sale, 4.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See Judgment, 5.

FORFEITURE.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance.

Of oil and gas lease, see Mines, 4, 5.

Of land contract for default in payment of instalment, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

FRANCHISE.

- Imposition of license tax on, see License, 4-6, 10, 11.
- Taxation of, see Municipal Corporations, 1; Taxes, 1, 3.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

- Right of appellate court to pass upon merits of plea of, see Appeal and Error, 10.
- Effect of discharge in bankruptcy on fraudulent debt, see Bankruptcy, 8, 9.
- Of agent in reissuing note after maturity, see Bills and Notes, 4.
- Presumption that contract is fraudulent as defense in action to enforce it, see Contracts, 32.
- Liability of officers of corporation issuing fraudulent prospectus, see Corporations.
- Effect of, on running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 3.
- In location of mine, see Mines, 2.
- Sufficiency of pleading to show fraud which will prevent bar of limitations, see Pleading, 4.
- Rescission of land contract for, see Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

1. The purchase by an insolvent of goods on credit without disclosing the facts that he has given a mortgage upon his present and future property, to secure an existing indebtedness, is such fraud as to give the vendor a right to avoid the sale and sue to recover the property, or to recover the value of the goods from the purchaser in an action for fraud, with the remedies afforded by statute in such cases, or to proceed against him in bankruptcy. Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman, 28: 363, 121 S. W. 1042, 135 Ky. 163.

2. One who makes representations to another of material facts, for the purpose of inducing that other to enter into contractual relations with him, and which are liable to accomplish the purpose without want of ordinary care on the part of such other, is bound at his peril to know whereof he speaks. Kathan v. Comstock, 28: 201, 122 N. W. 1044, 140 Wis. 427.

FREIGHT CARRIERS.

- See Carriers, 9-14.

FRIGHT.

- Of horse, see Highways, 5, 7.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.

- See Judgment, 5.

FUNERAL EXPENSES.

- Review on appeal of allowance for, see Appeal and Error, 12.
- Reducing allowance for, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 32.

GAS.

- Oil and gas lease, see Cancellation of Instruments, 1; Mines, 3-5.

GRANT.

- Of land under water, see Waters, 1.
- 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

- Committee of insane persons, see Incompetent Persons.

HARMLESS ERROR.

- See Appeal and Error, 20-31.

HEALTH.

- Police power as to, generally, see Constitutional Law, 9.

HEARSAY.

- Evidence of, see Evidence, 36-38.

HEIRS.

- Meaning of word "heir" in deed, see Deeds.

HEPBURN ACT.

- See Carriers, 13.

HIGHWAYS.

- As to bridges, see Bridges.
- Crossing of railroads by, see Constitutional Law, 4, 8; Municipal Corporations, 3; Railroads, 6-9.
- Cutting off of access to highway as element of damages in eminent domain case, see Damages, 6.
- License tax for use of by telephone company, see License, 6.

Obstruction.

- Jurisdiction of equity of suit to remove structure from sidewalk, see Equity, 1.

1. A municipal corporation which owns the fee of its streets has no implied authority to permit the erection by an abutting owner of a solid wall of masonry extending 6 or 7 feet onto the sidewalk, for the convenience of its building and in keeping with its architectural design, although by reason of its decorative and artistic appearance it enhances the attractiveness of the street. New York v. Rice, 28: 375, 91 N. E. 283, 198 N. Y. 124. (Annotated)

2. A demand by a municipal corporation which has given an illegal permit to maintain a structure on the sidewalk, that it be removed, is sufficient notice of revocation of the permit. New York v. Rice, 28: 375, 91 N. E. 283, 198 N. Y. 124.

3. An abutting owner cannot interfere to prevent the construction of a subway in the street for a car line, however seriously he may be inconvenienced thereby, where the public officers charged with the control of such matters have authorized such construction. State ex rel. Dawson v. Parsons Street R. & E. Co. 28: 1082, 105 Pac. 704, 81 Kan. 430.

Liability for injuries on.

- Negligence of person injured by automobile, see Automobiles.
- Liability for injury by electric wires in highway, see Electricity, 1, 2.
- Notice to city of injury to municipal employee in street, see Municipal Corporations, 5.
- 4. A step 4½ inches high and 10½ wide, placed on the sidewalk against a building, to facilitate access to it, is not an obstruction to the walk which will render the municipality liable for permitting its presence there in case a pedestrian falls over it, to his injury. Richmond v. Lambert, 28: 380, 68 S. E. 276, — Va. —.

5. A reel of lead pipe needed for its work, which is placed by a telephone company in line with its poles near the curb of a street in which it is engaged in stringing its wires, under lawful authority from the municipality, is not an unlawful obstruction to travel, which will render it liable for injuries caused by a traveler's horse becoming frightened at it, although it is of such appearance as would be likely to frighten well-broken horses not accustomed to it. Simonds v. Maine Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 28: 942, 72 Atl. 175, 104 Me. 440.

6. A property owner cannot escape liability for injury to a pedestrian through ice formed on the sidewalk from water cast thereon from a pipe constructed by him, because at the time of the injury the property was in possession of a tenant. Maloney v. Hayes, 28: 200, 91 N. E. 911, 206 Mass. 1. (Annotated)

7. The driver of a horse approaching an appliance which a telephone company is lawfully using in a highway is bound to foresee that the horse may be frightened at it, and to take measures to avoid or prevent the possible consequences. Simonds v. Maine Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 28: 942, 72 Atl. 175, 104 Me. 440.

HOMESTEAD.

Effect of acceptance of option to purchase given by husband on wife's declaration of homestead made with notice of option, see Contracts, 9.

HOMICIDE.

Capacity to commit, see Criminal Law, 1.

Sufficiency of warrant of commitment, see Criminal Law, 2.

Murder of insured, see Insurance, 9; Pleading, 8.

1. Death resulting from the violation of a municipal ordinance is not within the meaning of a statute defining manslaughter as the unintentional killing of another while the slayer is in the commission of some unlawful act. State v. Collingsworth, 28: 770, 92 N. E. 22, 82 Ohio St. 154. (Annotated)

2. Inflicting upon another a wound not calculated to endanger or destroy life, but which, because of improper treatment, does have that effect, does not render one guilty of murder. Tibbs v. Com. 28: 665, 128 S. W. 871, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

3. A homicide resulting from the running of fire apparatus through a crowd in answer to a false alarm turned in by the participants in the run, for the avowed purpose of making the run to see the people scatter, is not excusable under a statute providing that homicide shall be excusable when committed by accident, or in doing any other lawful act by lawful means with the usual and ordinary caution, and without unlawful intent. State v. Brecount, 28: 187, 107 Pac. 763, 82 Kan. 195.

HORSES.

Injury to, while in possession of bailee, see Evidence, 19.

Injury to, in hands of bailee, see Evidence, 35.

Fright of, on highway, see Highways, 5, 7.

Injury at railroad crossing in attempting to stop runaway horse, see Trial, 20.

In general, see Animals.

HOTELS.

See Innkeepers.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Increasing penalty of bond in prosecution for abandonment, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Restraint upon alienation upon grant of fee in trust for married woman, see Covenants and Conditions, 2.

As to divorce, see Divorce and Separation.

Effect of one spouse joining in execution of other's mortgage to convey former's separate property included in the instrument, see Estoppel, 6.

Effect of record of mortgage on wife's property as notice that husband's property is included therein, see Records and Recording Laws.

Under a deed in trust for the sole and separate use of a married woman and her heirs, but not her assigns, she acquires an equitable fee, which, upon the death of her husband, becomes an absolute estate, which she may assign at will. Hauser v. St. Louis, 28: 426, 170 Fed. 906, 96 C. C. A. 82.

ICE.

On sidewalk, see Highways, 6.

IDENTITY.

Presumption of, see Evidence, 6.

ILLEGAL CONTRACTS.

See Contracts.

ILLNESS.

Right of servant to recover for time lost through illness, see Master and Servant, 1.

IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATIONS.

See Constitutional Law, 10, 11.

IMPEACHMENT.

Of witness, see Witnesses, 4-6.

IMPLIED AGREEMENTS.

See Contracts, 3.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Allowance for, in ejectment, see Ejectment.

Retaining jurisdiction to settle amount of allowance for, see Equity, 5.

IMPUTED NOTICE.

See Notice.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Competency to commit crime, see Criminal Law, 1.

Incompetency of witness, see Witnesses, 1.

The conservator of the estate of one who becomes insane after executing a will which bequeathed money and securities of a certain amount to specified legatees, subject to a contract, by which he had placed that amount with a bank, to be managed, the income to be paid to testator on demand, and the property accounted for to testator's estate after his death, has no authority to demand the income, so as to adeem the legacies, if it is not necessary, either for the conservation of the estate or the support of the ward. Wilmerton v. Wilmerton, 28: 401, 176 Fed. 896, 100 C. C. A. 366.

(Annotated)

INCONSISTENCY.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 3, 4.

INDEBTEDNESS.

Limitation of state indebtedness, see State.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Liability for acts of, see Master and Servant, 24, 26; Trial, 11.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

1. An indictment for malicious cutting and wounding, with intent to maim, disfigure, and kill, need not specify the instrument with which the injury was inflicted. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 295, — W. Va. —.

2. Under an indictment charging cutting and wounding, with intent to maim, disfigure, and kill, thereby causing great bodily harm, proof of an injury inflicted otherwise than by cutting or wounding cannot be made, although the statute, besides inhibiting stabbing, cutting, and wounding, makes it a felony for a person maliciously to cause another bodily harm by any means, with intent to maim, disfigure, or kill him. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 295, — W. Va. —.

INDORSEMENT.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 2.

On insurance policy as part of contract, see Insurance, 1.

INFANTS.

Liability for injury by electricity to trespassing infants, see Electricity, 3.

1. An infant who has paid for and received stock for which he subscribed in a corporation may, during minority, rescind the contract and recover the money paid, upon tendering back the stock which still remains in his possession. Wuller v. Chuse Grocery Co. 28: 128, 89 N. E. 796, 241 Ill. 398.

(Annotated)

2. The return to a corporation of stock which has been purchased by an infant is effected upon his rescission of his contract, by the cancelation of the certificate which was issued to him. Wuller v. Chuse Grocery Co. 28: 128, 89 N. E. 796, 241 Ill. 398.

(Annotated)

INFORMATION.

See Indictment, etc.

INFRINGEMENT.

Of trademark, see Trademarks.

INJUNCTION.

Dismissal on appeal of bill for, see Appeal and Error, 34.

Waiver of right to, in bringing suit on implied contract, see Contracts, 3.

By Federal to state court, see Courts, 2, 3.

Against violation of building restrictions in covenant, see Covenants and Conditions, 4, 5.

Who may enjoin violation of building restriction, see Covenants and Conditions, 7.

Against filing of rates of interstate commerce commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.

Who may enjoin violation of building restriction, see Covenants and Conditions, 7.

Right of one whose only title is under tax deed to one whose heir he is, to enjoin one holding under government title, see Cloud on Title.

Joinder of parties to restrain violation of covenant, see Parties, 1.

Mandatory Injunction.

1. A mandatory injunction will not be issued to compel a municipal corporation to extinguish a fire in a mine within its limits, which is on private property and was started without any wrongdoing on its part. Cameron v. Carbondale, 28: 494, 76 Atl. 198, 227 Pa. 473.

2. One who deliberately violates building restrictions placed upon his lot for the benefit of a district in a city cannot avoid a mandatory injunction to compel the modification of his building so as to comply with the restrictions, on the theory that the loss caused by it will be disproportionate to the good accomplished. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

Covenants.

See also supra, 2.

3. Equity will enforce by injunction a covenant in a deed of conveyance, restricting the use of the land conveyed to the building and maintenance of a family residence, where such covenant is still of substantial value to the dominant estate, and it affirmatively appears that the neighborhood continues to be a locality suitable for residential purposes, notwithstanding a change in the general condition of the neighborhood. Brown v. Huber, 28: 705, 83 N. E. 322, 80 Ohio St. 183. (Annotated)

Taking of, or injury to, real property.

4. Injunction will lie against the obstruction of a passageway in such a manner as to destroy it by adverse user, although substantial damage has not yet been caused by the obstruction. Danielson v. Sykes, 28: 1024, 109 Pac. 87, — Cal. —.

INNKEEPERS.

A guest departing from a hotel acts at his own risk in leaving money with the clerk, to be deposited in the safe until he calls for it, and cannot hold the hotel keeper responsible in case it cannot be found when he returns for it. Oxford Hotel Co. v. Lind, 28: 495, 107 Pac. 222, 47 Colo. 57.

(Annotated)

INNOCENCE.

Presumption of, see Evidence, 12.

INSANITY.

See Incompetent Persons.

INSOLVENCY.

Of social club, see Appeal and Error, 1; Clubs, 1; Equity, 3, 4.

As to bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy.

INSPECTION.

Master's duty as to, see Master and Servant, 8, 9, 25; Trial, 11.

See also Discovery and Inspection.

INSTRUCTIONS.

See Trial, 1-20.

INSURANCE.

Right of holder of tontine policy to accounting on its maturity, see Accounting.

Error in instructions in action on policy, see Appeal and Error, 29.

Evidence in action on policy, see Evidence, 48, 54, 57.

Right to enter judgment for amount alleged to be due by tontine policy holder where company refuses to account, see Judgment, 1.

Necessary parties in suit by holder of tontine policy for accounting, see Parties, 4.

Relief under pleadings, see Pleading, 1. Striking out immaterial denial, see Pleading, 3.

Sufficiency of pleading, see Pleading, 1, 5, 8.

Release of surety on bond of insurance agent, see Principal and Surety, 1.

Directing verdict for defendant, see Trial, 14.

Admissibility of evidence to impeach witness, see Witnesses, 5.

Construction of policy generally.

1. An indorsement on an insurance 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

policy, designating its kind, is no part of it, and insured cannot be held to have relied on it rather than on the terms of the instrument. Hill v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 28: 742, 124 N. W. 898, — Iowa, —.

Use and care of property.

2. A warranty in an insurance policy that insured will use due diligence that the automatic sprinkler system shall at all times be maintained in good working order is not broken by the temporary disconnection of the system for the purpose of making extensions to it, where the work of making the alterations is prosecuted with due diligence. Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 28: 593, 106 Pac. 194, 56 Wash. 681. (Annotated)

3. Temporary breach by an insured of his warranty that due diligence will be used that the automatic sprinkler system shall at all times be maintained in good working order will not prevent his recovering on the policy, if, at the time of the loss, it was in good working order, and the breach had nothing to do with the loss,—at least, where there is no express provision in the policy for its becoming void for such breach, while such provisions are found in connection with other conditions and warranties. Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 28: 593, 106 Pac. 194, 56 Wash. 681.

Inventory.

4. The loss of an inventory by theft from an unlocked safe while the building in which such safe was located was open for business, and the consequent failure to produce the same, does not invalidate a fire insurance policy containing an iron safe clause, where the insured used such care on the occasion of the theft as prudent men acting in good faith would have used, notwithstanding a provision that a failure to produce an inventory shall render the policy null and void, as such provision does not require production of the inventory when it has been lost through no fault, neglect, or design of the insured. German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Newbern, 28: 337, 106 Pac. 826, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

Forfeiture.

5. Insurance policies should not be construed to work a forfeiture of either party's rights unless it plainly appears that such was the intention of both contracting parties. Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 28: 593, 106 Pac. 194, 56 Wash. 681.

Notice; proofs of loss.

6. A requirement of a mutual benefit society that suit cannot be brought until a certain time after proofs of death are furnished is waived by refusal of the proper officer to furnish blanks for such proof, because the notice given him was of absence for more than seven years, rather than of death. Miller v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 28: 178, 122 N. W. 1126, 140 Wis. 505.

7. An insurance policy requirement that proof of loss shall be made by insured under oath requires such proof to be sworn to personally by the insured, although in general substantial compliance with the requirements as to proof of loss is sufficient. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Mittendorf, 28: 651, 104 Pac. 354, — Okla. —

(Annotated)

Arbitration.

Admissibility of evidence of attempt to arbitrate, see Evidence, 57.

8. A provision of an insurance policy that, in event of disagreement as to amount of loss, each party shall appoint an appraiser, and the two appraisers shall select an umpire and appraise the loss, and that no action shall be maintained on the policy until such appraisement, when appraisal has been required, is satisfied as to the insured when he, acting in good faith, appoints an appraiser; and it is not incumbent on him, when the appraisement fails without his fault, to appoint or propose the appointment of a second appraiser, as a condition precedent to suit on the policy. German-American Ins. Co. v. Jerrils, 28: 104, 108 Pac. 114, 82 Kan. 320.

(Annotated)

Risks and causes of loss, injury, and death.

9. The beneficiary in a life insurance policy, whose intentional and felonious act causes the death of the assured, cannot recover upon the policy. Filmore v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 28: 675, 92 N. E. 26, 82 Ohio St. 208.

Extent of recovery.

10. A separate allowance may be made for each operation necessitated by an accident, which is mentioned on the schedule of an accident insurance policy which provides that, in case an operation is necessitated by any accident, a sum shall be paid in addition to the indemnity provided for by the policy, of the sum indicated for such operation in the schedule, "provided always that not more than one amount shall be payable for one or more operations performed as the result of one accident." Anderson v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 28: 730, 74 Atl. 1051, 75 N. H. 375.

11. No liability for death arises upon a policy insuring against permanent disability. Hill v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 28: 742, 124 N. W. 898, — Iowa, —

(Annotated)

12. An accident insurance company cannot escape liability on its contract for weekly indemnity during a certain period, for total disability caused by an accident which, among other things, results in loss of a limb, because provision for such indemnity is made subject to subsequent provisions, one of which is that, if injury results in loss of such limb, a specified sum less than the claim for total disability shall be paid, whereupon the policy shall be surrendered; and another of which provides that in no event will claim for weekly indemnity be valid, if a valid claim for any of the amounts provided for special injuries can be based upon the same accident and resulting injury,—at least where, among 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the provisions for special allowances, is one to the effect that, if the injuries result in total disability, the indemnity shall be the sum per week named on the face of the policy for a certain period, provided the disability continue so long. Anderson v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 28: 730, 74 Atl. 1051, 75 N. H. 375.

(Annotated)

Defenses.

See also supra, 9.

13. A conspiracy, unaccompanied by an overt act, to burn insured property, in which the owner joins, does not, although it is in process of accomplishment at the time the property is destroyed by fire, avoid the policy, under provisions that the policy shall be void in case of any fraud touching any matter relating to the subject of the insurance, or if the hazard is increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured. Ampersand Hotel Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 28: 218, 91 N. E. 1099, 198 N. Y. 495.

INTENT.

Parol evidence to show, see Evidence, 31, 32.

Materiality of evidence as to, see Evidence, 40.

INTEREST.

To disqualify juror, see Appeal and Error, 21, 30.

Effect of to disqualify witness, see Wills, 3.

Effect of payment of interest on barred note to revive under a mortgage securing it, see Limitation of Actions, 10.

Effect of refusal of tender of amount due on mortgage on right to interest, see Mortgage, 6.

Usurious interest, see Usury.

1. Interest cannot be allowed for the retention of money vexatiously withheld, in the absence of a statutory provision for its allowance. Young v. Kimber, 28: 626, 98 Pac. 1132, 44 Colo. 448.

2. Damages recovered in an action ex delicto against a carrier for injuries to, and delay in the transportation of, live stock, draw interest, at least from the time of delivery. Fell v. Union P. R. Co. 28: 1, 88 Pac. 1003, 32 Utah, 101. (Annotated)

INTERROGATORIES.

To witnesses, see Witnesses, 2, 3.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Commerce.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

A state court of equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin a railroad company engaged in interstate transportation, from filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission a schedule of its rates for transportation of coal from a point in one state to a point in another state, on the ground that such rates are unreasonable, unfair, and discriminatory, since it is the exclusive power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to pass upon that question in the first instance. Thacker Coal & C. Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 28: 108, 68 S. E. 107, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

INTERVENTION.

See Parties.

INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Action of public authorities in seizing, as defense to carrier for nondelivery of, see Carriers, 10.

Interstate commerce in, see Commerce, 2-4.

Mandamus to compel enforcement of Sunday law, see Mandamus, 3.

Validity of warrant to search for, see Search and Seizure.

1. An agent who is sent into wet territory to purchase and bring intoxicating liquors into dry territory, for a principal living therein, for use as a beverage, does not by so doing furnish intoxicating liquors to such principal, within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the direct or indirect selling, furnishing, giving away, or otherwise dealing in intoxicating liquors for use as a beverage. State v. Lynch, 28: 334, 90 N. E. 935, 81 Ohio St. 336.

(Annotated)

2. Illinois Crim. Code, § 259, providing punishment for one who keeps open on Sunday a place where intoxicating liquor is sold, is in force in Chicago. People ex rel. Bartlett v. Busse, 28: 246, 87 N. E. 840, 238 Ill. 593.

INVENTORY.

Condition for taking and keeping in insurance policy, see Insurance, 4.

JOINDER.

Of parties plaintiff, see Parties, 1.

JOINT OWNERS.

Tender by owner of half interest of amount of mortgage on other half, see Mortgage, 1, 2.

JUDGMENT.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 32-36.

Change of decree for alimony as impairment of contract obligation, see Constitutional Law, 10, 11.

Judicial notice of judicial records and decisions, see Evidence, 1.

Execution on, see Execution.

Right of one partner to purchase judgment against the other, see Partnership.

Form and substance.

1. In case an insurance company refuses to render an account to the holder of a tontine policy, of the amount due on the policy, the court may enter judgment against it for the amount alleged to be due, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

by the policy holder. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Winn, 28: 558, 126 S. W. 153, — Ky. —.

Effect and conclusiveness.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 35, 36.

2. A judgment sustaining a special demurrer to a plea which alleges fraud in general terms, without setting out any facts constituting the fraud, is not upon the merits, so as to prevent a complete plea of fraud, with proper allegations, from being offered by way of amendment. Dolvin v. American Harrow Co. 28: 785, 54 S. E. 706, 125 Ga. 699.

3. A decree specifically enforcing performance of a contract to sell real estate in accordance with an option which had been given thereon does not affect the rights of one claiming an intermediate contract for the land who was not made a party to the suit. Smith v. Bangham, 28: 522, 104 Pac. 689, 156 Cal. 359.

4. One holding a claim against a decedent's estate is not bound by a decree of the surrogate's court in a proceeding to which he is not a party, settling the executor's accounts, and declaring the estate to be insolvent, nor by a decree entered on petition of the executor's surety, amending the original decree by restating the dividend to which creditors were entitled, after a citation to such claimant to attend the hearing. Woodruff v. H. B. Claffin Co. 28: 440, 91 N. E. 1103, 198 N. Y. 470.

Foreign judgments.

5. A judgment enforceable in the state where rendered must be given effect in another state, under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, although the modes of procedure to enforce its collection may not be the same in both states. Sistare v. Sistare, 28: 1068, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 682, 218 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 905.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See Evidence, 1.

JUDICIAL SALE.

On mortgage foreclosure, see Mortgage, 8.

For taxes, see Taxes, 5, 6.

Purchasers and their rights and duties.

Effect of delay on right to abatement of price for deficiency in quantity. see Limitation of Actions, 2.

1. The rule caveat emptor does not apply to mistakes in the quantity of land sold by the acre at a judicial sale. Singleton v. Castleman, 28: 393, 68 S. E. 34, — W. Va. —.

2. One who purchases land by the acre at a judicial sale is entitled to an abatement of the purchase money proportionate to any material deficiency in the amount of land bid for and supposed to have been sold, resulting from mistake or misrepresentation of the court or its agents, even after deed made, at least where the purchaser still retains in his hands, unpaid, sufficient of the purchase money out of which such abatement can be made. Singleton v. Castleman, 28: 393, 68 S. E. 34, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

Confirmation.

3. Confirmation by the court of a sale of land by the acre by commissioners authorized to make sale thereof, "as a whole or in parcel," cures the irregularity of sale by the acre, and gives the sale the same validity and effect as if made upon the precise terms of the decree. Singleton v. Castleman, 28: 393, 68 S. E. 34, — W. Va. —.

JURISDICTION.

Of bankruptcy court, see Bankruptcy, 1.

Of divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation.

Of equity, see Equity.

JURY.

Presumption that jury were properly sworn, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Error in retaining interested persons on jury, see Appeal and Error, 30.

Reversal of verdict rendered by jury made up in part of interested persons, see Appeal and Error, 21.

Error in permitting jury trial, see Appeal and Error, 31.

As judge of trustworthiness of evidence, see Evidence, 49.

Question for, see Trial.

Time for objecting to form of oath administered to, see Trial, 2.

1. The verdict of a jury is waived by motions by both parties for directed verdicts, where there is no conflict in the evidence as to any material fact and the court is authorized to enter such judgment as the evidence warrants. Easterly v. Mills, 28: 952, 103 Pac. 475, 54 Wash. 356.

2. That other corporations whose liability depends upon the same state of facts are joined as defendants with a municipal corporation does not affect the plaintiff's right to challenge "to the favor" as to resident taxpayers of the city, although such jurors were competent as to the other defendants, at least where there is no difficulty in procuring jurors whose impartiality as to all the parties defendant is unquestioned. Broadway Mfg. Co. v. Leavenworth Terminal R. & B. Co. 28: 156, 106 Pac. 1034, 81 Kan. 616.

JUSTICE.

Obstruction of, see Obstructing Justice.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Lien of execution issued upon judgment rendered by, see Execution, 3.

JUSTIFICATION.

Of libel, see Libel and Slander, 3.

KEY.

Delivery of key as constructive delivery of property, see Sale, 1.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

LACHES.

See Estoppel, 2; Limitation of Actions, 1, 2.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Cancellation of oil and gas lease, see Cancellation of Instruments, 1.

Liability of landlord for injury from ice on sidewalk, see Highways, 6.

Lease for oil and gas, see Mines, 3-5.

Fixtures.

A tenant does not lose the right to remove trade fixtures which can be removed without the least injury to the freehold, by renewing his lease, and entering upon a new term thereunder, without reserving the right to remove the fixtures. Thomas v. Gayle, 28: 767, 120 S. W. 290, 134 Ky. 330.

LARCENY.

Sufficiency of proof of corpus delicti, see Evidence, 56.

Receiving stolen property, see Receiving Stolen Property.

LAWS.

See Statutes.

LEADING QUESTIONS.

See Witnesses, 2.

LEASE.

Oil and gas lease, see Cancellation of Instruments, 1; Mines, 3-5.

LEGACY.

See Wills.

LEGISLATURE.

Limitation on power to create debt, see State.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Pleading in suit to recover property levied on, see Pleading, 7.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Recovery for use of vile epithets, see Assault and Battery.

Evidence in action for, see Evidence, 47.

What actionable generally.

1. It is libelous per se for a responsible person maliciously to write to a committee whose recommendation is necessary to the obtaining of a pastorate, and before which the application of a clergyman for a pulpit is pending, of such clergymen, "I would not have anything to do with him, or touch him with a 10-foot pole," as such statement would tend to expose the applicant to contempt and injury in his business. Cole v. Millsbaugh, 28: 152, 126 N. W. 626, — Minn. —. (Annotated)

Privileged communications.

2. A confidential communication by one whose property has been burned, to a fellow sufferer, of the fact that he had been informed of another's intention to burn the property, for the purpose of procuring his aid in ascertaining the author of the fire, is privileged. Edwards v. Kevil, 28: 551, 118 S. W. 273, 133 Ky. 392.

Actions; defenses.

3. Admission of speaking the substance of the words charged, or of so much of them as would sustain an action for slander, is sufficient to entitle one accused of slander to justify on the ground of privilege. Edwards v. Kevil, 28: 551, 118 S. W. 273, 133 Ky. 392. (Annotated)

LICENSE.

Imposing license tax on telephone company, see Municipal Corporations, 1.

On interstate business, see Commerce, 5.
Performance by physician of services in state where he is not licensed, see Contracts, 21.

Revocation of permit to obstruct sidewalk, see Highways, 2.

1. That a corporation refusing to pay its license tax is not thereby deprived of the right of doing business does not invalidate the statute providing for the tax. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369.

2. That under a statute providing for the payment by a corporation of a license tax on a certain day in each year, which will entitle it to do business for the ensuing year, a corporation organized after the expiration of the specified day may do business until the next tax day arrives, does not invalidate the statute. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369.

3. A statute providing for the payment, by corporations, of a license tax on or before a certain day of a certain month of each year, is not void for uncertainty in not fixing the time at which the duty to pay the tax arises. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369.

4. The exaction of a percentage of the gross earnings of a telephone company by a municipal ordinance granting it a franchise is an exercise of the taxing power of the city, and is a tax upon the business or occupation of conducting a telephone business within the city. Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Lincoln, 28: 221, 117 N. W. 284, 82 Neb. 59.

5. The provision for an annual payment of $500 to a city in the respective franchise ordinances of two telephone companies, "in consideration of the rights and privileges granted," is a sum exacted by the city for the privilege of using the streets, under its proprietorship of the streets, and, while termed a "privilege tax," is in the nature of a rental charge or compensation for the use of the streets. Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Lincoln, 28: 221, 117 N. W. 284, 82 Neb. 59.

Double taxation.

6. An occupation tax measured by a percentage of the gross earnings of a telephone company, whose franchise is also taxed in connection with its tangible property, according to its value as a going concern, does not tax the same property twice. Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Lincoln, 28: 221, 117 N. W. 284, 82 Neb. 59. (Annotated)

Power as to generally.

7. An ordinance lawfully enacted by a city under its charter power, which imposes upon telephone companies a business or occupation tax measured by the gross receipts within the city, is not invalidated by the fact that tolls and rentals collected within the city are in part for messages over lines lying in part beyond the city limits, where United States, state, and interstate business is expressly exempted. Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Lincoln, 28: 221, 117 N. W. 284, 82 Neb. 59.

Uniformity and equality.

8. A provision in an ordinance imposing an occupation tax, that "the sum and amount of the occupation tax or taxes on the gross receipts required to be paid under existing ordinances" may be deducted from the amount of the tax, does not violate a constitutional provision that taxes must be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same, because not uniform as to persons or property, since by its operation all persons engaged in the same occupation are taxed upon the same basis and in the same manner. Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Lincoln, 28: 221, 117 N. W. 284, 82 Neb. 59.

9. A municipal corporation cannot impose a license tax on automatic vending machines when no tax is placed upon merchants selling the same articles as are sold by the machine, without its aid, where no police supervision or regulation of the machine is necessary. Seattle v. Dencker, 28: 446, 108 Pac. 1086, — Wash. —.

Reasonableness.

10. The mere right to be a corporation is not property so as to come within the operation of a constitutional provision that all property shall be taxed according to its value, and declaring that the word "property" shall include franchises. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369. (Annotated)

11. A license tax on corporations is not a tax on their franchises in the sense that the word is used in the Constitution, declaring them to be property and requiring property to be taxed according to its value, and therefore such taxes may be proportioned to the capital involved, at least where the Constitution also authorizes a license tax on franchises. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369.

Enforcement.

12. A license tax upon a corporation, and penalty for its nonpayment, may be made a lien upon its tangible property. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369.

LIENS.

Agreement for support in consideration of conveyance as basis for equitable lien, see Cancellation of Instruments, 2.

Of execution, see Execution.

Of license tax, see License, 12.

Of mortgage, see Mortgage.

Of vendor, see Vendor and Purchaser, 5.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

LIFE TENANTS.

Right of one of several remaindermen to compel partition during life estate, see Partition.

LIGHTNING.

Explosion caused by, killing servant, see Master and Servant, 5.

LIGHTS.

Negligence in lighting bridge, see Bridges, 2.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Adverse possession, see Adverse Possession.

Effect of appearance by nonresident after limitation period, see Appearance, 1.

Effect of injunction as requiring debtor to allow limitations to run upon its causes of action, see Courts, 2.

Contractual limitation of time for action on insurance policy, see Insurance, 6.

Time for adding omitted property to tax roll, see Taxes, 4.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 2.

Laches.

Effect of delay in enjoining violation of restrictive covenants, see Covenants and Conditions, 5.

1. One cannot be prejudiced by delay in instituting a suit to protect his rights if it is due to the influence of one having a record interest in the property to be affected by the suit, in preventing the attorneys of complainant from proceeding with the litigation. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

2. The rule of laches does not apply to prevent the proportionate abatement of the purchase money for deficiencies in amount as to land purchased at a judicial sale, where no equities have intervened and no one has been prejudiced or injured by the delay, so long at least as the purchaser still retains in his hands, unpaid, sufficient of the purchase money out of which such abatement can be made. Singleton v. Castleman, 28: 393, 68 S. E. 34, — W. Va. —.

When statute runs.

3. Where one practises fraud and deceit upon another, thereby inducing acceptance by the latter of property in settlement of a debt much greater in amount than the value of the property, an injury is done to property, and not to the person, and the 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

statute of limitations in reference to actions for injuries to property applies. Crawford v. Crawford, 28: 353, 67 S. E. 673, — Ga. —. (Annotated)

4. The cause of action for damages resulting from the flooding of land caused by the construction over a stream of a bridge with insufficient openings to carry the volume of water reasonably to be expected accrues at the time of the flooding, and not at the time of the construction of the bridge. Broadway Mfg. Co. v. Leavenworth Terminal R. & B. Co. 28: 156, 106 Pac. 1034, 81 Kan. 616.

Interruption of statute; removal of bar.

5. Owners of property against which a special assessment for local improvements is directed to be made by the court after an attempted levy has been set aside cannot avoid liability thereon on the ground that the limitation period has run since the first assessment became delinquent, if it has not run since the court ordered the new assessment. Shaw & Hodgins v. Snohomish, 28: 735, 104 Pac. 272, 55 Wash. 271.

(Annotated)

6. Service of summons in ejectment arrests the running of the statute of limitations in favor of a defendant who claims title by adverse possession, though the form of action is subsequently changed, by amendment of plaintiff's petition, to a suit to redeem from a mortgage. Butler v. Smith, 28: 436, 120 N. W. 1106, 84 Neb. 78.

7. In case process is served by publication, the action is not commenced, for the purpose of determining whether or not it is within the time allowed by the statute of limitations, until the publication is completed. Slater v. Roche, 28: 702, 126 N. W. 925, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

8. An action to subject property of a nonresident to payment of a judgment against him is, for the purpose of determining whether or not it is within the time allowed by the statute of limitations, commenced when the property is attached. Slater v. Roche, 28: 702, 126 N. W. 925, — Iowa, —.

9. A suit is commenced when the writ is filled out with the intention of having it served. Anderson v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 28: 730, 74 Atl. 1051, 75 N. H. 375.

10. Payment of interest on a note barred by the statute of limitations revives both the note and a mortgage given to secure it, so far as affects the interest of the payors, and continues the mortgage as a valid lien superior to the rights of subsequent judgment lien holders, under a statute providing that in any case founded on contract, where a payment of principal or interest has been made, an action may be brought within the statutory period after such payment. Clark v. Grant, 28: 519, 109 Pac. 234, — Okla. —.

11. The running of the statute of limitations upon a mortgage debt will be arrested by a payment by the mortgagor before the action is barred, although he has transferred the property to a stranger, where, under the statute, a payment continues and keeps alive the original promise. Kaiser v. Idleman, 28: 169, 108 Pac. 193, — Or. —. (Annotated)

12. A mortgage is embraced by a statute providing that whenever any payment shall be made upon any existing contract, whether it be bill of exchange, promissory note, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness, the limitation shall commence from the time it is made. Kaiser v. Idleman, 28: 169, 108 Pac. 193, — Or. —.

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

By carrier, see Carriers, 12-14; Duress; Trial, 9.

By telegraph company, see Conflict of Laws, 1; Telegraphs, 3.

LIVE STOCK.

Transportation of, see Carriers, 12.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS.

See Public Improvements.

LOCATION.

Of mines, see Mines, 1, 2.

LOGS AND LOGGING.

The placing of loose logs in a stream in such quantities that they form a jam which is likely to be broken at any time by the rising water, without taking any precautions to prevent injury by their movement to persons navigating the river, or to warn them of danger, may be found to be negligence which will render the owner of the logs liable for the death of one drowned by the overturning of his boat through the moving of the logs. Henderson v. Doniphan Lumber Co. 28: 144, 127 S. W. 459, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

MACHINERY.

Failure of master to guard, see Master and Servant, 6, 7, 20.

Assumption of risk of injury by, see Master and Servant, 11.

MALICIOUS INJURY.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish offense of, see Evidence, 55.

Indictment for, see Indictment and Information.

To constitute a "wound" within the meaning of W. Va. Code 1906, chap. 144, § 9, regarding the malicious or felonious wounding of another, an injury must have been inflicted with a weapon other than any of those with which the human body is provided by nature, and must include a complete parting or solution of the external or internal skin. State v. Gibson, 28: 965, 68 S. E. 295, — W. Va. —.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

One in possession of chattels without title cannot maintain an action for damages for malicious prosecution against one who wrongfully institutes a replevin action against him for them. Powers v. Houghton, 28: 330, 123 N. W. 1108, 159 Mich. 372 (Annotated)

MALPRACTICE.

Evidence in action for, see Evidence, 44, 45.

In general, see Physicians and Surgeons

MANDAMUS.

Necessary parties defendant to mandamus proceeding, see Parties, 2.

To mayor.

1. A mayor having statutory authority to suspend for cause the chief of the fire department and communicate the facts to the board of fire commissioners, who shall proceed to consider the desirability of his removal from office, cannot be compelled by mandamus at the suit of a taxpayer to exercise the power of suspension because of charges of dishonesty against such chief, where he has investigated the charges, and determined that they were not sufficient to require suspension of the official. State ex rel. Davern v. Rose, 28: 194, 122 N. W. 751, 140 Wis. 360. (Annotated)

2. A mayor having all the powers of a chief executive cannot be compelled by mandamus at the suit of a taxpayer to remove from office the chief engineer of the fire department for dishonesty and perjury, misappropriation of public property, and the use of offices at his command to pay personal debts. State ex rel. Davern v. Rose, 28: 194, 122 N. W. 751, 140 Wis. 360.

3. Mandamus will not lie to compel the mayor of a city to enforce the Sunday closing law against a saloon keeper. People ex rel. Bartlett v. Busse, 28: 246, 87 N. E. 840, 238 Ill. 593. (Annotated)

To compel assessment or levy of tax.

4. Mandamus lies to compel a county clerk to enter upon the tax rolls taxable personal property omitted from the assessor's returns, as required by a statute providing for the entering of personal property subject to taxation which has not been listed by the owner or returned by the assessor, where such officer admits the existence and value of the property, but declines to correct the assessment and enter it upon the tax rolls, because of the contention that the property is not taxable, and because he is in doubt as to his power in the premises. State ex rel. Taggart v. Holcomb, 28: 251, 106 Pac. 1030, 81 Kan. 879.

To corporations.

Necessary parties defendant in mandamus to street railway company, see Parties, 2.

5. Under a statute requiring railroad companies to make reasonable provision for the transportation of coal and coke offered them for shipment by operators and manufacturers along their lines, a carrier may be compelled by mandamus to construct and operate upon its right of way a side track and switch, where the facts and circumstances show the necessity therefor. State ex rel. Mt. Hope Coal Co. v. White Oak R. Co. 28: 1013, 64 S. E. 630, 65 W. Va. 15.

Procedure.

6. An alternative writ of mandamus, though regarded as a pleading, is the writ of the court, and when the substantive matter thereof is sufficient to justify a part, but not all, that is commanded by the writ, the appellate court may, in a case of original jurisdiction, so amend the alternative writ as to make it conform to the mandate of the peremptory writ awarded. State ex rel. Mt. Hope Coal Co. v. White Oak R. Co. 28: 1013, 64 S. E. 630, 65 W. Va. 15.

7. Recitals in an alternative writ of mandamus by a coal operator commanding a railroad company, as required by W. Va. Code 1906, § 2364, to make "reasonable provision" for the transportation of coal offered it for shipment, showing that the things commanded by the writ are substantially those which in prior negotiations between the parties the carrier had regarded as reasonable and proper, will be regarded, on a motion to quash, as showing the reasonableness of the demand and as making a prima facie case for the coal operator. State ex rel. Mt. Hope Coal Co. v. White Oak R. Co. 28: 1013, 64 S. E. 630, 65 W. Va. 15.

8. Provisions which a railroad company had determined, before the issuance of an alternative writ of mandamus to compel it to make reasonable provision for the transportation of coal offered it for shipment, were proper, will on final hearing be assumed to be such as may reasonably be required of the carrier, at least where a different showing has not been made. State ex rel. Mt. Hope Coal Co. v. White Oak R. Co. 28: 1013, 64 S. E. 630, 65 W. Va. 15.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

See Injunction, 1, 2.

MANSLAUGHTER.

See Homicide.

MANUFACTURERS.

Taxation of finished product of, see Taxes, 2.

MARRIAGE.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws, 2.

Divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

MARRIED WOMAN.

See Husband and Wife.

MASSSES.

Bequests for, see Charities, 1, 3, 4.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Presumption of negligence from injury to employee, see Evidence, 14-17.

Wages.

Statute regulating assignments of wages or salaries, see Constitutional Law, 2, 7.

Agreement by third party to pay wages of employee, see Contracts, 28.

Right of discharged employee to recover for wages for whole contract period, see Assumpsit, 1.

Amendment of declaration in action for wages, see Pleading, 2.

1. A servant employed by the month can recover no compensation for the time during which he was prevented from performing services by sickness. MacFarlane v. Allan-Pfeiffer Chemical Co. 28: 314, 109 Pac. 604, — Wash. —. (Annotated)

Notice of injury.

Notice to city of injury to municipal employee on highway, see Municipal Corporations, 5.

2. The taking, by a railroad claim agent, of a written statement from an employee injured by the derailment of his engine, regarding the time, place, manner, and cause of the derailment, and the nature and extent of the injuries, within three weeks after the happening thereof, constitutes a waiver by the company of a clause in the injured person's contract of employment, providing that notice of a claim for an injury must be given within thirty days of the happening thereof, notwithstanding the statement did not state the amount of the claim for the injury, as required by the contract. Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 28: 1255, 107 Pac. 635, 82 Kan. 136.

3. Failure of the employer to receive the notice is immaterial where a statute providing for service of notice of injury for which the master is to be held liable states that it may be served by post, by letter addressed to the person on whom it is to be served. Hurley v. Olcott, 28: 238, 91 N. E. 270, 198 N. Y. 132. (Annotated)

Duty as to place and appliances generally.

Review on appeal of verdict as to dangerous condition of place of work, see Appeal and Error, 16.

Presumption as to cause of death of servant, see Evidence, 13.

Presumption of negligence from failure of safety device to work, see Evidence, 14.

Presumption of negligence from fall of scaffold, see Evidence, 17.

Presumption of negligence from death of employee, see Evidence, 16.

Sufficiency of evidence to show negligence of master, see Evidence, 51, 52.

Proximate cause of injury to servant, see Proximate Cause, 3.

Master's negligence as question for jury, see Trial, 7.

See also infra, 24-26.

4. The negligence of a master in storing dynamite in dangerous quantities in a room provided for the use of workmen is not negated by the fact that an explosion is an unusual and extraordinary occurrence. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

5. A master who negligently stores high explosives in a room provided for the use of workmen in storing tools and clothing and seeking shelter from storms cannot escape liability for the death of a workman killed by an explosion, by the fact that it was caused by lightning. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

6. Failure of an employee to replace the guard to an emery wheel which he has removed in the performance of his duties constitutes negligence per se upon the part of a master, under a statute requiring the guarding of machinery where practicable, as the statute in such case adopts the rule of absolute duty. Davidson v. Flour City Ornamental I. Works, 28: 332, 119 N. W. 483, 107 Minn. 17.

7. Emery wheels are included within the machinery required to be guarded by Minn. Rev. Laws 1905, § 1813, providing that all saws, planes, set screws, drums, "and machinery," as far as practicable, shall be guarded. Davidson v. Flour City Ornamental I. Works, 28: 332, 119 N. W. 483, 107 Minn. 17.

Inspection.

Question for jury as to master's negligence in failing to inspect, see Trial, 11.

See also infra, 25.

8. Making tests only at intervals of two or three weeks to determine whether or not a device installed to stop machinery when employees become caught in it is in working order may be found to be negligent, where it is of delicate construction, and tests made have frequently shown it to be out of order. Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28: 1207, 126 S. W. 1037, 227 Mo. 347.

9. A mine owner owes the duty to his servants who are working on a slope in the mine to inspect batteries or dams which are erected to prevent loosened materials from rolling down on them, to see that they are reasonably safe. McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 28: 1244, 104 Pac. 801, 55 Wash. 495.

Assumption of risk.

As question for jury, see Trial, 8.

10. A servant who assumes the risk of getting his hand caught in the machine at which he is required to work may hold his master liable for aggravation of his injury by failure of a device installed to stop the machine in case of such accident to work, so that his arm is drawn into the machine and crushed. Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28: 1207, 126 S. W. 1037, 227 Mo. 347.

11. An employee does not assume the risk of a device installed by his master to lessen the risk of injury from the machinery at which he is required to work being permitted by the employer to get out of order, unless he himself has notice of the fact that it is so out of order. Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28: 1207, 126 S. W. 1037, 227 Mo. 347.

12. A miner working on a slope does not assume the risk of injury from the unsafe condition of a battery or dam maintained above him to keep loosened materials from rolling upon him, where such condition could only be discovered by examination, since the duty to maintain it in a safe condition is upon the master. McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 28: 1244, 104 Pac. 801, 55 Wash. 495.

13. A servant does not assume the risk of injury from the negligence of his master merely because he could have discovered and avoided it by the exercise of ordinary care; his assumption of such risk depending upon his actually being aware of and appreciating the danger. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, 28: 1250, 117 S. W. 243, 89 Ark. 424.

14. A railroad engineer does not assume the risk of injury from driving his engine over defective ties and rails, which are in place, and of which defects he has no knowledge and no opportunity of knowing except such as comes from so operating his engine thereover, where such defects have existed for such a length of time that the railway company is bound to have notice thereof. Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 28: 1255, 107 Pac. 635, 82 Kan. 136.

15. A miner does not assume the risk of the unsafe timbering of the mine, although the timbers are set by the miners themselves, where it is done under the supervision of the boss and they are paid extra for such work. McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 28: 1244, 104 Pac. 801, 55 Wash. 495.

Contributory negligence.

16. The employer of a miner engaged in cutting into a seam of coal, whose employment requires him to see that props are placed as fast as needed, is not liable for the miner's death, due to his failure to prop the roof soon enough, so that it falls upon and kills him. Smith v. North Jellico Coal Co. 28: 1266, 114 S. W. 785, 131 Ky. 196.

Fellow servants and their negligence.

Presumption of negligence of coservant, see Evidence, 15.

Sufficiency of evidence to show negligence of coservant, see Evidence, 50.

See also supra, 15.

17. That a battery or dam in a mine to prevent loosened material from rolling down a slope upon miners working below was erected by the miners themselves does not relieve the master from liability to one of them who is injured by its insufficiency, where he had no part in its construction.

McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 28: 1244, 104 Pac. 801, 55 Wash. 495.

18. The act of a repair gang on a railroad in removing a hand car from the track to permit a train to pass is connected with the operation of the road, within the meaning of a statute abolishing the fellow-servant rule in case of accidents connected with such operation. Cahill v. Illinois C. R. Co. 28: 1021, 125 N. W. 331, — Iowa, —.

Who are fellow servants.

19. A domestic servant of mature age and the fourteen-year-old son of her employer, who is also engaged in performing ordinary domestic services in the absence of the father, but pursuant to his general directions, are fellow servants, where neither are in any manner under the control or direction of the other, so as to preclude recovery of damages by the domestic from the employer for personal injuries caused by the son's negligence. Waxham v. Fink, 28: 367, 125 N. W. 145, 86 Neb. 180.

20. A servant who, in the course of his duties in operating an emery wheel, is required to remove the guard thereto and change wheels, is not a fellow servant of a coemployee who is injured by the bursting of the wheel while being operated with the guard off, the operator having neglected to replace it after having changed the wheels, since the statutory duty to guard such a wheel is a continuing, nonassignable one which cannot be discharged by merely furnishing suitable guards and exercising reasonable care in the selection of an operator. Davidson v. Flour City Ornamental I. Werks, 28: 332, 119 N. W. 483, 107 Minn. 17.

Liability of master for acts of servant or independent contractor.

Question for jury as to whether inspection of appliances erected by independent contractor would have revealed defects, see Trial, 11.

21. A watchman is guilty of wantonness which will render his master liable for the consequences of his act, in firing in the night at a technical trespasser upon the master's property, who is retreating to avoid arrest or assault, although he did not intend to hit him, but only to halt or frighten him. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. 28: 88, 108 Pac. 260, — Ariz. —.

(Annotated)

22. A technical trespasser on the property of a railroad company is not guilty of contributory negligence in running when told by a watchman to stop, which will prevent his holding the railroad company liable for the injury in case he is hit by a bullet. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. 28: 88, 108 Pac. 260, — Ariz. —.

23. A person employed to watch premises and turn over to a police officer any person whom he believes to be committing a crime against the property acts within the scope of his employment in firing at a fleeing trespasser to compel him to halt. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. 28: 88, 108 Pac. 260, — Ariz. —.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

24. A master cannot delegate to an independent contractor power to exercise the care to make devices safe for servants which the law imposes upon him as a personal obligation. Winslow v. Commercial Bldg. Co. 28: 563, 124 N. W. 320, — Iowa. —.

25. A mere superficial inspection, by the owner of a building, of a fire escape placed on the building by an independent contractor, is not sufficient per se to relieve him from liability for injury to a servant who, in attempting to use the device, is injured by its fall because the fastenings are let into the wall just far enough to hold it in place until it has passed inspection. Winslow v. Commercial Bldg. Co. 28: 563, 124 N. W. 320, — Iowa, —.

26. The owner of a building cannot avoid liability for injury to his servant through the fall, because of improper fastenings, of a fire escape upon which he was employed in the performance of his duties, merely because it was erected by an independent contractor selected with due care. Winslow v. Commercial Bldg. Co. 28: 563, 124 N. W. 320, — Iowa, —.

MATERIALITY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 39-48.

MATURITY.

Of contract for enforcement against bankrupt estate, see Bankruptcy, 5.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 3, 4.

MAXIMS.

1. A court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction of the property, will do complete justice as between the parties interested therein. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

2. Caveat emptor. Singleton v. Castleman, 28: 393, 68 S. E. 34, — W. Va. —.

3. Qui facit per alium, facit per se. State v. Lynch, 28: 334, 90 N. E. 935, 81 Ohio St. 336.

4. Res ipsa loquitur. Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co. 28: 586, 86 N. E. 805, 194 N. Y. 37; Johns v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 28: 591, 75 Atl. 408, 226 Pa. 319; Dail v. Taylor, 28: 949, 66 S. E. 135, 151 N. C. 284.

5. The letter killeth, while the spirit keepeth alive. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 261, 98 Minn. 380.

MAYOR.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus, 1-3.

MEDICINE.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

MEMORANDUM.

Required by statute of fraud, see Contracts, 13, 16.

MERITS.

Right of appellate court to pass upon, see Appeal and Error, 10.

MESNE PROFITS.

Retaining jurisdiction to settle amount of allowance for, see Equity, 5.

MINES.

Injunction to compel municipality to extinguish fire in mine, see Injunction, 1.

Master's duty as to inspection, see Master and Servant, 9.

Assumption of risk by employees in, see Master and Servant, 12, 15.

Contributory negligence of servant injured in, see Master and Servant, 16.

On public lands.

1. A mineral location claim the exterior boundaries of which include such an unreasonably excessive area that such boundary lines cannot be said to impart notice to a prospector of a mineral location or discovery within the reasonable distance of a lawful claim as located under the statute pertaining thereto, is void, since it will be deemed that the boundaries thereof have never been marked and established as required by law. Nicholls v. Lewis & Clark Min. Co. 28: 1029, 109 Pac. 846, — Idaho, —.

2. A mineral location embracing an area equal to more than two and one third full claims as defined by statute, on which there was no location notice posted, and as to which the discovery cuts, if any, were very indistinct at the time of the subsequent location of another claim, which is alleged to be adverse thereto, is fraudulent and void as to the latter claim, where the latter was located in good faith, and it appears that, after learning of the excessive area of the first claim, the locator thereof made no effort to readjust his boundaries until after the filing of the adverse suit, before which time he had knowingly permitted the locator of the second claim to develop it to an extent claimed sufficient to entitle it to a United States patent, and that, when a readjustment was made, the boundaries were so swung as to include the discovery shaft on the second claim, in which position they did not correspond with the calls of the location notice of the original claim. Nicholls v. Lewis & Clark Min. Co. 28: 1029, 109 Pac. 846, — Idaho, —.

On private lands.

Cancellation of lease, see Cancellation of Instruments, 1.

Carrier's duty as to transportation of coal and coke, see Carriers, 9; Constitutional Law, 6; Mandamus, 5, 7, 8.

3. An estate vested in the lessee under a lease for oil and gas which is for five years and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced by the lessee, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

which term is not limited by any requirement that oil or gas must be found in paying quantities, when a well producing gas is drilled, and the lessee, in good faith, elects to consider it in paying quantities. McGraw Oil & G. Co. v. Kennedy, 28: 959, 64 S. E. 1027, 65 W. Va. 595.

4. A lessor is not authorized to forfeit a lease for oil and gas which is for five years and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced by the lessee, by the fact that the product of a producing gas well has not been marketed, where the lessee is willing to pay the stipulated rental for the well. McGraw Oil & G. Co. v. Kennedy, 28: 959, 64 S. E. 1027, 65 W. Va. 595.

5. A lessor cannot forfeit a lease for oil and gas which is for five years and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced by the lessee, because he thinks the gas is not being produced in paying quantities, where the lessee claims that it is, and is willing to pay the stipulated rental, as it is for the lessee to say whether the gas is produced in paying quantities, conditioned only on his acting in good faith. McGraw Oil & G. Co. v. Kennedy, 28: 959, 64 S. E. 1027, 65 W. Va. 595.

MINORS.

See Infants.

MISTAKE.

As basis of equity jurisdiction, see Equity, 2.

MONEY IN COURT.

Right of one paying amount of mortgage into court to subrogation, see Subrogation.

MORTGAGE.

Right of mortgagee to enjoin violation of building restriction, see Covenants and Conditions, 7.

Effect of one spouse joining in execution of other's mortgage to convey former's separate property included in the instrument, see Estoppel, 6.

Effect of payment of interest on barred note to revive mortgage securing it, see Limitation of Actions, 10.

Effect of payment to interrupt running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 11, 12.

Effect of changing form of action from ejectment to suit to redeem from mortgage on running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 6.

Joinder of mortgagor and mortgagee to enjoin violation of covenant, see Parties, 1.

Record of, see Records and Recording Laws.

Service of process on nonresident defendant, see Writ and Process, 2.

Tender.

Subrogation of one paying amount of, into court, see Subrogation.

Exactng payment of interest for full term upon payment before maturity, see Usury, 1.

1. The owner of a half interest in a parcel of real estate has a right to tender the amount due on a mortgage on the other half interest, and be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and intervene in the foreclosure suit. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

2. The holder of a mortgage on a half interest in a parcel of real estate cannot refuse a tender by the owner of the other half interest, on the ground that he is attempting to gain an advantage over his co-owner. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

3. A mortgagee cannot reject a tender of the amount due on the mortgage, because of objections to the source from which the money comes. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

4. The lien of a mortgage cannot be discharged by a tender of the amount due thereon out of court pending an action to foreclose the mortgage. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

5. A tender out of court of the amount due on a mortgage in process of foreclosure will not be permitted to destroy the lien of the mortgage as a basis for affirmative relief by removal from the record as a cloud on title, without actual payment of the amount due. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

6. One who refuses an unqualified tender of the amount due on a mortgage, believing it to be to his advantage to do so, will not be allowed interest on the debt after the date of the tender. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

Sale; confirmation.

8. The confirmation of a sale under a power contained in a mortgage does not so far divest the interest of the mortgagor as to deprive him of the right to except to the confirmation of a resale in case the first bidder defaults, and the property is resold at his risk at an amount considerably less than the first bid. Werner v. Clark, 28: 94, 71 Atl. 305, 108 Md. 627.

MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

Raising question for consideration on appeal by motion, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Error in entertaining motion to strike out separate defense, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Certiorari to review order of inspection, see Certiorari.

Waiver of right to jury trial by motions for directed verdict, see Jury, 1.

Motion for new trial, see New Trial, 2.

The suggestion in a motion to instruct the jury to find a verdict for defendant, that "the facts proven are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff as matter of law to recover," is equivalent to assigning that the evidence is insufficient to justify a verdict for plaintiff, so as to render a denial of the motion error in case the evidence was insufficient. Waxham v. Fink, 28: 367, 125 N. W. 145, 86 Neb. 180.

MOTIVE.

Evidence to show motive of a conductor in ejecting passenger, see Evidence, 41.

MULTIPLICITY OF SUITS.

Jurisdiction of equity to avoid, see Equity, 3, 4.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Acceptance of warrant in payment for public work as accord and satisfaction, see Accord and Satisfaction.

Permitting resident tax payers to serve on jury in action against city, see Appeal and Error, 30; Jury, 2.

Authorizing obstruction of sidewalk, see Equity, 1.

Estoppel of, see Estoppel, 1.

Power to permit obstruction of sidewalk, see Highways, 1, 2.

Injunction to compel municipality to extinguish fire in mine, see Injunction, 1.

Mandamus to municipal officers, see Mandamus, 1-4.

Duty of municipal officer to declare reason for suspending or not suspending subordinate, see Officers.

As necessary party defendant in mandamus proceeding, see Parties, 2.

Sufficiency of pleading as to notice of claim, see Pleading, 6.

Ordinances.

Failure to secure passage of ordinance within time agreed as defense to action for breach of building contract, see Contracts, 31.

Death inflicted while violating municipal ordinance, see Homicide, 1.

1. A clause providing for the exaction of a percentage of the gross earnings of its business, in a municipal ordinance granting a franchise to a telephone company, is legislative in its character and subject to repeal. Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Lincoln, 28: 221, 117 N. W. 284, 82 Neb. 59.

2. A municipal corporation having authority to declare what shall constitute a nuisance, and abate the same, may prevent the maintenance of ordinary railway cattle yards in its residence district. Colton v. South Dakota Central Land Co. 28: 122, 126 N. W. 507, — S. D. —. (Annotated)

Contracts.

3. A contract by a city with a railroad company, that the city would thereafter construct and maintain all crossings and approaches made necessary by the opening of new streets, is ultra vires and void, as an attempt to abdicate the police power of the city. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 261, 98 Minn. 380.

4. The entire claim of a contractor for work which he has performed for a municipality is not defeated by the fact that he purchased some of his supplies from the mayor, where the statute provides that any claim for materials furnished in which that officer is interested shall be void. Shaw & Hodgins v. Snohomish, 28: 735, 104 Pac. 272, 55 Wash. 271.

Liability for damages.

Liability for defects or obstructions in streets, see Highways, 4, 5.

5. A statutory provision that all claims for injury alleged to have been caused by defects, want of repair, or obstruction of the streets of a city, must be presented to the council, is inapplicable to an injury to a workman engaged in repairing a street by the fall of an electric light pole maintained therein, since the injury did not result from obstruction of the street as a place of travel, and the statute did not contemplate presentation of claims arising from failure to furnish employees a safe working place. Giuricevic v. Tacoma, 28: 533, 106 Pac. 908, 57 Wash. 329. (Annotated)

MURDER.

See Homicide.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

See Insurance.

MUTUALITY.

Of contracts, see Contracts, 6, 7.

NAME.

As trademark, see Trademarks.

As to tradename, see Tradename.

Mistake in Christian name in service of process, see Writ and Process, 1.

Use of initials of Christian name in service of process, see Writ and Process, 2.

NEGLIGENCE.

Of railroad company in leaving oil car where cattle can reach it, see Animals, 1.

As to bridges, see Bridges.

Of or toward passengers, see Carriers. Damages for, see Damages, 3.

As to electricity, see Electricity.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 14-19.

As to highways, see Highways.

As to negligent homicide, see Homicide, 2, 3.

Of person running logs in stream, see Logs and Logging.

Of master, see Master and Servant.

Wanton negligence of servant, see Master and Servant, 21.

Of municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporations, 5.

Private action for negligent destruction of bridge, see Nuisances.

Of physician, see Physicians and Surgeons.

Notice to city of claim for personal injuries, see Pleading, 6.

Of county commissioners in failing to require settlement of account by tax collector, see Principal and Surety, 2, 3.

Of telegraph company, see Telegraphs. Sufficiency of evidence to take question to jury, see Trial, 4, 5.

Instructions as to, see Trial, 19.

Contributory.

Contributory negligence of passenger, see Carriers, 6-8.

Of servant, see Master and Servant, 16.

In attempting to cross railroad track at other point than at regular crossing, see Railroads, 5.

Instruction as to, see Trial, 20.

Question whether verdict for plaintiff violated instructions as to contributory negligence, see Trial, 23.

Of trespasser shot by servant, see Master and Servant, 22.

As to injuries from defects or obstructions in highways, see Highways, 7.

Of person injured by automobile, see Automobiles.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes.

NEW TRIAL.

Raising question for review on appeal by motion for, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Grounds for, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 33.

1. A new trial may be granted in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, on the ground of inadequacy of the damages found by the jury, when it appears upon the facts proven that the jury must have omitted to take into consideration some of the elements of damage properly involved in the plaintiff's claim. Toledo Railways & L. Co. v. Mason, 28: 139, 91 N. E. 292, 81 Ohio St. 463.

2. The assignment of error in a motion for new trial, that "the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence" or "the verdict is contrary to law," is sufficient to challenge the attention of the trial court to its ruling in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant, under the Neb. Acts 1907, chap. 162, since there should be an instruction to find for defendant if the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff. Waxham v. Fink, 28: 367, 125 N. W. 145, 86 Neb. 180.

NOTES.

Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 28.

NOTICE.

- Of election to try case to jury, see Appeal and Error, 31.
- Of restrictive covenants, see Covenants and Conditions, 9.
- To master of injury to servant, see Master and Servant, 2, 3.
- Of claim against city, see Municipal Corporations, 5; Pleading, 6.
- From record, see Records and Recording Laws.
- To one purchasing property as to rights of persons selling, see Sale, 9.

1. A bank whose cashier induces a stranger to substitute his note for his own, which is held by the bank, is not, by reason of the cashier's knowledge, chargeable with notice that the maker received no consideration for the note. State Bank v. Forsyth, 28: 501, 108 Pac. 914, — Mont. —.

2. Notice to one of the directors of a matter affecting the interest of the bank, which it is to the interest of such director to conceal, is not notice to the bank. First Nat. Bank v. Lowther-Kaufman Oil & C. Co. 28: 511, 66 S. E. 713, 66 W. Va. 505.

NUISANCES.

- Power of municipality as to, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

One having a contract with the Federal government to carry mail over a certain route six times a week, who is compelled to take a circuitous route because of the negligent destruction of a bridge, suffers special damages giving him a right of action against the one through whose negligence the bridge was destroyed, under a statute permitting a private person to maintain an action for a public nuisance if specially injured thereby. Sholin v. Skamania Boom Co. 28: 1053, 105 Pac. 632, 56 Wash. 303.

OATH.

- Presumption that jury were properly sworn, see Appeal and Error, 7.
- Requirement that proofs of loss shall be made by insured under oath, see Insurance, 7.
- Time for objecting to form of oath administered to jury, see Trial, 2.

OBJECTIONS.

- To raise question on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 5.
- In general, see Trial, 1, 2.

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE.

- Review of conviction for resisting execution of warrant, see Appeal and Error, 13.

When warrant is void so as to justify resistance to execution of, see Search and Seizure.

Standing on the threshold of a house and refusing to permit an officer to enter to execute a search warrant, without further overt act, is sufficient to support a conviction of obstructing the officer in the 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

execution of process. Appling v. State, 28: 548, 128 S. W. 866, — Ark. —.

OBSTRUCTION.

- Of highway, see Highways, 1-5.

OFFICERS.

- Liability of constable for killing dog, see Animals, 2.
- Review of conviction for resisting execution of search warrant, see Appeal and Error, 13.
- Of corporation, see Corporations.
- Mandamus to, see Mandamus.
- Obstruction of, in exercise of right, see Obstructing Justice.
- Liability of public officer to sureties of other officer for loss sustained by them through former's neglect to require proper settlement of accounts, see Principal and Surety, 2, 3.

An executive officer of a city having statutory authority to suspend subordinate officials from office is not bound to declare the reasons for his action or nonaction in any particular case. State ex rel. Davern v. Rose, 28: 194, 122 N. W. 751, 140 Wis. 360.

OIL.

- Oil and gas lease, see Cancellation of Instruments, 1; Mines, 3-5.

OPINIONS.

- As evidence, see Evidence, 35.

OPTION.

- Option contracts, generally, see Contracts, 6, 9, 10.
- Effect as to strangers of decree for specific performance of option contract, see Judgment, 3.
- Specific performance of option contract, see Specific Performance.

ORCHESTRA.

- Protection of right to name of, see Tradename.

ORDINANCES.

- Infliction of death while violating, see Homicide, 1.
- In general, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.

OVERPAYMENT.

- Right of executor to recover, see Executors and Administrators.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

- See Evidence, 30-34.

PARTIES.

- Error in failing to dismiss suit for misjoinder of, see Appeal and Error, 24.
- To contract, see Contracts, 2.
- Right of defendant to complain of dismissal as to codefendant, see Dismissal and Discontinuance, 1.

Effect of striking out of party to work discontinuance of case, see Dismissal and Discontinuance, 2.

Conclusiveness of judgment against persons not parties, see Judgment, 3, 4.

Plaintiffs.

Who may enforce covenants, see Covenants and Conditions, 7.

Who may have remedy against nuisance, see Nuisances.

1. A mortgagor and mortgagee of property for the benefit of which a building restriction has been imposed upon neighboring property may join in a suit to enjoin violation of the covenant. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 28: 634, 92 N. E. 37, 206 Mass. 28.

Defendants.

2. A city, in the streets of which a street railway company holding a franchise providing that its tracks be laid at the grade of the streets has been ordered by the state railroad commissioners to construct a subway beneath the tracks of a railroad, is not a necessary party to a mandamus proceeding by the state, to compel compliance therewith, especially where a majority of the city officers who, by acting together, could represent it, disclaim any desire for it to be heard, and it is not apparent that any injury will result to it by the decision. State ex rel. Dawson v. Parsons Street R. & E. Co. 28: 1082, 105 Pac. 704, 81 Kan. 430.

3. A joint action may be maintained by the holder of a negotiable note, and a joint judgment recovered against the maker and all the indorsers, where notice and protest have been waived by the indorsers, under a statute providing that an action may be maintained and a joint judgment rendered against the maker and indorser of negotiable paper, "if the same be protested." First Nat. Bank v. Lowther-Kaufman Oil & C. Co. 28: 511, 66 S. E. 713, 68 W. Va. 505.

4. The other members of the class are not necessary parties to a suit by the holder of a tontine policy of life insurance against the insurer for an accounting of the amount due on his policy. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Winn, 28: 558, 126 S. W. 153, — Ky. —.

5. No election can be compelled between a devise and property covered by the will which is alleged to belong to the devisee, in a suit to which the person to whom the devise was made is not a party. McDonald v. Shaw, 28: 657, 121 S. W. 935, 92 Ark. 15.

Intervention.

Right of owner of half interest to intervene in foreclosure of mortgage on other half, see Mortgage, 1.

6. In a suit to recover possession of real estate in which a cross complaint is filed to compel the claimant to elect between claiming it and accepting a benefit under a will which is alleged to have covered it, claims cannot be presented by persons who claim to have purchased property from testator's administrator, to subrogation against that estate for the amount of the purchase price paid, or by persons who claim compensation for support furnished to the beneficiary. McDonald v. Shaw, 28: 657, 121 S. W. 935, 92 Ark. 15.

PARTITION.

One of several remaindermen after a life estate cannot compel partition during the continuance of the life estate, even though he has acquired such life estate, unless he waives it. Brown v. Brown, 28: 125, 67 S. E. 596, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

PARTNERSHIP.

Presentation against bankrupt of claim growing out of partnership venture, see Bankruptcy, 3, 4.

One member of a partnership organized for a limited purpose may purchase with his own funds a judgment against his copartner having no connection whatever with the partnership transaction, prior to the institution of any proceedings affecting the partnership affairs or the existence of any funds out of which the latter is entitled to claim profits, and use the same as a set-off in settlement of its accounts. Miller v. Ferguson, 28: 618, 65 S. E. 562, — Va. —. (Annotated)

PART PAYMENT.

As affecting limitation of actions, see Limitation of Actions, 10-12.

PASS.

Acceptance of, by shipper of stock as ratification of contract limiting liability, see Contracts, 25.

PASSAGEWAY.

Injunction against obstruction of, see Injunction, 4.

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

See Carriers

PAYMENT.

Application of deposit by bank, see Banks, 3.

As affecting limitation of actions, see Limitation of Actions, 10-12.

Subrogation for, see Subrogation.

Exacting payment of interest for full term upon payment of debt before maturity, see Usury, 1.

PEDDLERS.

Interstate business of, see Commerce, 5.

PENALTIES.

Act increasing, as ex post facto law, see Constitutional Law, 1.

PERFORMANCE.

Of contract, see Contracts.

PERMIT.

Revocation of permit to obstruct sidewalk, see Highways, 2.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

On bridge, see Bridges.

To passengers, see Carriers.

Damages for, see Damages, 3.

New trial in action to recover damages for, see New Trial, 1.

Notice to city of claim against, for, see Pleading, 6.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Sale of, see Sale.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Validity of physician's contracts for services, see Contracts, 21, 22, 24, 32.

What constitutes breach of contract to furnish medical attendance, see Contracts, 30.

Evidence on question of damages for malpractice, see Evidence, 44, 45.

1. A surgeon is guilty of malpractice in treating as a mere bruise a fracture of the neck of the femur, where, when patient is placed on his back, his foot lies over on one side, without power on his part to control it. Bonnet v. Foote, 28: 136, 107 Pac. 252, 47 Colo. 232. (Annotated)

2. A physician who, after placing a patient on an insulated platform, puts a conical cap above and in front of the patient's head, through which static electricity is discharged, and leaves the room for eight or ten minutes, during which no attendant is present, is guilty of actionable negligence rendering him liable for the burning of the patient's head by the electricity during such absence from the room. Frisk v. Cannon, 28: 262, 126 N. W. 67, 110 Minn. 438. (Annotated)

PLACE OF WORK.

Master's duty as to, see Master and Servant.

PLAINTIFFS.

Parties plaintiffs, see Parties, 1.

PLAT.

Right of one purchasing with reference to, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1, 6.

PLEADING.

Review as to, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Evidence admissible under, see Evidence, 57.

Relief under pleadings.

1. In an action on an insurance policy, a petition alleging specific acts as a waiver of proof of loss, in proof of which contradicted evidence was introduced without objection, sufficient to show a waiver thereof upon other grounds, will be considered as amended so as to conform to the facts proved, and a waiver so proved is fairly in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

issue. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Mitten-dorf, 28: 651, 104 Pac. 354, — Okla. —.

Amendment.

Error in allowing amendment, see Appeal and Error, 25.

Effect of amending declaration on admissibility of deposition in evidence, see Evidence, 26, 27.

Right to amend plea after judgment sustaining demurrer to plea because insufficient, see Judgment, 2.

Effect of amendment changing form of action on running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 6.

Amendment of alternative writ of mandamus, see Mandamus, 6.

2. The declaration in an action to recover for services rendered under a contract for labor cannot be amended so as to claim damages for a wrongful discharge from the service. Derosia v. Firland, 28: 577, 76 Atl. 153, — Vt. —.

Striking out.

Error in entertaining motion to strike out separate offense, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Effect of striking out party to work discontinuance, see Dismissal and Discontinuance, 2.

3. A mere denial in a suit by the holder of a tontine insurance policy to compel an accounting of the amount due on the policy, that its books would show the amount to be due which is claimed by plaintiff, is not a good defense to the suit, and will be stricken out of the answer. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Winn, 28: 558, 126 S. W. 153, — Ky. —.

Declaration or complaint.

4. Where an action brought to recover damages for fraud is apparently barred by the statute of limitations, the petition, in order to relieve the action of the bar, on the ground that it was brought within the statutory period after discovery of the fraud, must show that the plaintiff used proper diligence to discover the fraud. Crawford v. Crawford, 28: 353, 67 S. E. 673, — Ga. —.

5. To sustain an action on an insurance policy, the insured must allege and prove compliance with conditions precedent or a waiver thereof. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Mitten-dorf, 28: 651, 104 Pac. 354, — Okla. —.

6. That a claim for personal injuries was presented in writing to the city council, as required by statute, is not shown by a complaint which states that plaintiff caused the city and its officers and agents to be fully informed of the extent of the injury, and that the officers and agents investigated the same. Giuricevic v. Tacoma, 28: 533, 106 Pac. 908, 57 Wash. 329.

7. An allegation that, at the time of the seizure of property to satisfy the debt of a third person, plaintiff was the owner and in possession of it, and that such property continued to be his until its sale by the sheriff, is sufficient to support an action for conversion. Western Min. Supply Co. v. Quinn, 28: 214, 105 Pac. 732, 40 Mont. 156.

Pleas and answers.

8. An averment that the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance "murdered" the assured sufficiently alleges an intentional killing of the assured by the beneficiary to prevent recovery by the latter upon the policy, where, under the statutes, intent is an essential element of murder. Filmore v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 28: 675, 92 N. E. 26, 82 Ohio St. 208.

Demurrer.

Conclusiveness of theory of law advanced for defendant in action dismissed on demurrer in subsequent action on same matters between same parties, see Estoppel, 4.

Right to amend plea after judgment sustaining demurrer to plea because insufficient, see Judgment, 2.

9. A complaint showing on its face that the agreement sued upon is within the statute of frauds, and fails to comply with its requirements, is demurrable. Harper v. Goldschmidt, 28: 689, 104 Pac. 451, 156 Cal. 245.

10. A plea of mutual mistake as to the effect of an instrument given by the agent of the payee of a renewal note to the maker, by which the payee agreed "to receipt" the maker "for note given me to-day," in that the agreement to receipt was a meaningless paper, whereas it was intended by both parties to signify an agreement upon the part of the payee to receipt for and cancel the obligation represented by the note upon performance of the conditions to secure compliance with which the note was given, and that the new note would not have been given had not the parties thought the agreement would protect the maker, except in case of breach of the conditions, against liability on the renewal note, which it was alleged would destroy a good plea of failure of consideration as to the original note, is sufficient as against general demurrer, although the plea may have contained certain allegations regarding, and references to, other papers and transactions which did not constitute a good plea of mutual mistake as to them. Dolvin v. American Harrow Co. 28: 785, 54 S. E. 706, 125 Ga. 699.

POLICE.

Liability for killing dog, see Animals, 2.

POLICE POWER.

See Constitutional Law, 4, 8, 9.

PONDS.

Grant by public of outlet of, see Waters, 1.

POSSESSION.

Adverse, see Adverse Possession.

Presumption as to, see Evidence, 21, 22.

As condition of right to maintain trespass, see Trespass, 3.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

POSTOFFICE.

Failure of master to receive notice of injury mailed by employee, see Master and Servant, 3.

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-31.

PRESCRIPTION.

Title by, see Adverse Possession.

PRESENTATION.

Of claims against bankrupt, see Bankruptcy, 3-5.

PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 7-9.

In general, see Evidence, 2-22.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Power of agent of public contractor to compromise dispute with city as to amount due him, see Accord and Satisfaction, 2.

Authority of bank cashier, see Banks, 1, 2.

Authority of agent to indorse extension of time on past-due note, see Bills and Notes, 3.

Fraud of agent in reissuing note after maturity, see Bills and Notes, 4.

Duty of broker to account to principal for secret profits, see Brokers.

As to carrier's agent, see Carriers.

Effect of limitation of liability in receipt prepared by shipper's agent, see Carriers, 14.

Written authority to agent to contract for sale of property as dispensing with necessity that contract of sale itself be in writing, see Contracts, 12.

Estoppel of municipality to deny authority of agent to act for it, see Estoppel, 1.

Liability of one purchasing liquors as agent of another with latter's money, see Intoxicating Liquors, 1.

Imputing agent's knowledge to principal, see Notice.

Extent of agent's authority as question for jury, see Trial, 13.

1. The mere fact that an agent for the sale of a horse for $3,000 took $1,000 for it is not sufficient, as matter of law, to charge the purchaser with notice that he is exceeding his authority, although he at first said he had no authority to accept the latter sum, where he subsequently states that he has received such authority. Galbraith v. Weber, 28: 341, 107 Pac. 1050, — Wash. —.

2. One purchasing a horse which has been placed in the hands of an agent for sale has a right to rely upon the agent's having authority to fix the price. Galbraith v. Weber, 28: 341, 107 Pac. 1050, — Wash. —.

Sale of land by agent.

3. A contract by one cotenant to sell the real estate belonging to both is not binding on the other where it does not comply with the terms of the written authority conferred upon him. Hartenbower v. Uden, 28: 738, 90 N. E. 298, 242 Ill. 434.

Undisclosed principal.

4. A purchaser of coal who does not know, and has no good reason to know, that he is dealing with the agent of the owner, is justified in treating the agent as owner, and in a suit by such undisclosed principal for the purchase price, is entitled to credit thereon for the amount of loss sustained by him on the sale of a suit of clothes agreed by the agent to be by him received in part payment for the coal, but which was not delivered because of the agent's death. Eldridge v. Finninger, 28: 227, 105 Pac. 334, — Okla. — (Annotated)

Ratification of agent's acts.

5. The payee of a renewal note cannot, after knowledge of all the facts, ratify the act of his agent in obtaining such note by suing thereon, and at the same time repudiate as unauthorized the act of his agent in executing contemporaneously therewith an agreement detrimental to him, which contemporaneous agreement was the inducing cause of the execution of the renewal note. Dolvin v. American Harrow Co. 28: 785, 54 S. E. 706, 125 Ga. 699.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

1. The change of the state in which a solicitor of life insurance is to work, after the execution of a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, will not, although it enlarges his responsibilities, release the surety, where the bond provides that it shall not be annulled or revoked without the consent of the obligee, but shall remain in force, whether under the agent's existing appointment or any future one, and the agency contract provides that the agent shall have authority in the original state, and shall give a satisfactory bond which shall hold good "under this or any future agreement." Daly v. Old, 28: 463, 99 Pac. 400, 34 Utah, 74. (Annotated)

2. The failure of county commissioners to effect a settlement with the tax collector, and require him to exhibit the necessary receipts for one year before placing the duplicates of the next year in his hands, as required under penalty by statute, does not render them liable to the sureties on his bond, who are compelled to make good money which he collects and fails to account for under the new duplicates. Hudson v. McArthur, 28: 115, 67 S. E. 995, 152 N. C. 445. (Annotated)

3. Failure of county commissioners to effect a proper settlement with a tax collector, and require him to exhibit the necessary receipts for one term before entering upon the duties of a succeeding one, is not the cause of injury to persons signing his bond for the succeeding term, through losses occasioned by his embezzlement during such term and afterwards, so as to give the sureties a cause of action against the 28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

commissioners for their negligence. Hudson v. McArthur, 28: 115, 67 S. E. 995, 152 N. C. 445.

PRIORITY.

As between option to purchase and declaration of homestead, see Contracts, 9.

As between unrecorded contract for purchase and prior unrecorded option, see Specific Performance, 1.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

In libel case, see Libel and Slander, 2.

PROBATE.

Of Wills, see Wills, 3.

PROBATE COURT.

Admissibility of depositions in proceedings before, see Evidence, 25.

PROCESS.

See Writ and Process.

PROFITS.

Loss of, as element of damages, see Damages, 7.

PROOFS OF LOSS.

In general, see Insurance, 6, 7.

PROPERTY.

Guaranty of right to, see Constitutional Law.

PROSPECTUS.

Liability of officers of corporation issuing fraudulent prospectus, see Corporations.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Of loss by fire.

1. Failure of a telephone company for several minutes to connect a subscriber with the fire department is not the proximate cause of the destruction of his property, where the fire was under way when he awakened from sleep, and the department responded to a summons from a neighbor, so that there was not much actual delay in reaching the fire, and there is nothing to show that prompt service would have saved the property. Volquardsen v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 28: 554, 126 N. W. 928, — Iowa, — (Annotated)

Of injury to passenger.

2. The negligence of a railroad company in starting its train before one who has entered to assist a passenger has had time to alight is not the proximate cause of his injury in attempting to alight after the train is in motion, without the consent and against the will of the carrier's servants. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Bell, 28: 773, 68 S. E. 398, — Va. — (Annotated)

Of injury to servant.

3. A master's negligence in storing dynamite in a place where its accidental ignition will endanger the lives of his employees is the proximate cause of the death of a servant through its explosion, notwithstanding the cause of the explosion is purely accidental or wholly unknown. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

PUBLICATION.

Service of process by, see Limitations, 7.

PUBLIC CHARITIES.

See Charities.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Validity of statute providing for front-foot assessment, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Allowing attorney's fee against defendant in action to enforce special assessment, see Constitutional Law, 3.

Effect of running of limitations since original assessment upon reassessment, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

Damages for permanent injuries to land by construction of, thereon, see Damages, 4.

Property subject to assessment.

1. Benefits to accrue from an improvement consisting as a whole of the cutting down of the grade of a street, the construction of a viaduct, and the acquisition of private property to widen a street, cannot be assessed to pay for the cutting down of the street and the acquisition of the property, where that would be of no benefit to the public without the viaduct, and no definite plan as to it has been adopted, but it is merely talked about as desirable, without any present means on the part of the municipality to build it. Kansas City v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 28: 669, 130 S. W. 273, — Mo. —. (Annotated)

2. A freight depot and spur tracks of a railroad company, although part of its entire system, are subject to special assessment for local improvement, under a statute providing that the property of railroad companies shall be in all respects subject to all special assessments for local improvement in the same manner and to the same extent as the property of individuals. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Janesville, 28: 1124, 118 N. W. 182, 137 Wis. 7.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Effect of invalidity of contract for cutting timber on liability of third person agreeing to pay wages of employees so engaged, see Contracts, 28.

Mines on, see Mines, 1, 2.

PUBLIC POLICY.

See Contracts.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mandamus to compel compliance with orders of, see Parties, 2.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

QUANTITY.

Of land sold, see Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

QUESTION FOR JURY.

See Trial.

QUIETING TITLE.

See Cloud on Title.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Review by courts of orders of, see Courts, 1.

Mandamus to compel compliance with orders of, see Parties, 2.

Authorizing street railway company to construct subway beneath tracks of railroad, see Railroads, 3.

RAILROADS.

Negligence in leaving leaky oil car where cattle can reach it, see Animals, 1.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Implied agreement to pay for land taken for right of way, see Contracts, 3.

Contract to pay bonus to electric railway, see Contracts, 8, 18, 19; Evidence, 34.

Estoppel to sue on implied contract to pay for land taken for right of way, see Estoppel, 2.

Presumption of negligence from carrying away of railroad bridge by high water, see Evidence, 16.

Weight of evidence of witnesses that they did not hear signals, see Evidence, 53.

Assumption of risk by railroad employees, see Master and Servant, 14.

Forbidding maintenance of cattle yards in residence district, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

Assessments on, for local improvements, see Public Improvements, 2.

Damages for injury to land by wrongful construction of railway thereon, see Trial, 17.

Railroad aid.

1. A statute providing for the formation of railroad districts and the voting of bonds for the purchase or construction of railroads by such districts, and for the operating or leasing thereof, violates a constitutional provision prohibiting counties or other subdivisions of the state from lending their credit, either directly or indirectly, to any business enterprise in aid of any individual, association, or corporation, since the building of a railroad is not within itself an exercise of governmental power, but is a business enterprise. Atkinson v. Board of County Commissioners, 28: 412, 108 Pac. 1046, — Idaho, —. (Annotated)

Crossing by street railway.

Review of determination of state railroad commission as to crossing of tracks by street car lines, see Courts, 1.

Mandamus to compel street railway company to construct subway for tracks beneath railroad tracks, see Parties, 2.

2. A street railway company which is operating a continuous line across a city, except for a break caused by a number of railroad tracks, may be regarded as in effect operating its line across the railroad by means of a transfer, and may, therefore, be required to change its mode of crossing by the construction of a subway. State ex rel. Dawson v. Parsons Street R. & E. Co. 28: 1082, 105 Pac. 704, 81 Kan. 430.

3. Under a statute empowering the board of railroad commissioners to determine whether there is a necessity for the crossing of a railroad track by a street car line, "and, if so, the place thereof, whether it shall be over or under the existing railroad, or at grade, and in other respects the manner of such crossing," the board can authorize a street railway company to construct a subway in the street of a city beneath the tracks of a railroad company, in accordance with whatever regulations it may see fit to impose, so that they have relation to the safe operation of both roads and are not unreasonable. State ex rel. Dawson v. Parsons Street R. & E. Co. 28: 1082, 105 Pac. 704, 81 Kan. 430.

4. The legislature, having paramount authority over public streets, may, either directly or through a body to which it has delegated the power, authorize and require a street car company, which, by ordinance, has been granted a right to operate only a surface road, to construct a subway beneath the tracks of a railroad. State ex rel. Dawson v. Parsons Street R. & E. Co. 28: 1082, 105 Pac. 704, 81 Kan. 430.

Crossing by highway.

Requiring companies to pay for safety devices, see Constitutional Law, 4, 8.

Agreement by city with railroad to construct and maintain all crossings made necessary by new streets, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

5. A railroad company is not liable for injury to one who voluntarily turns aside from a crossing over the track, left unsafe by the company, and attempts to make the crossing over the unprotected rails, and is thrown from his wagon by the unevenness of the crossing place. Moore v. Great Northern R. Co. 28: 410, 107 Pac. 852, — Wash. —.

6. A municipality which lays out a street across a railroad right of way is vested with power to open the street at grade or by an overhead crossing, as propriety, necessity, and public safety require. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 261, 98 Minn. 380.

7. A highway bridge over a railroad track, when necessary to make the crossing safe for public use, is a "safety device," within the meaning of a rule requiring railroads to construct and maintain at crossings all such safety devices as are reasonably necessary for the protection of the traveling public. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 261, 98 Minn. 380.

8. A provision in a railroad company's charter that the company may construct its railroad along or over any highway, if that be necessary, but that the highways so crossed shall be put in such condition as not to impair or interfere with its free and proper use, applies to streets and highways laid out over the railroad after its construction. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 261, 98 Minn. 380.

9. A railroad company receives its charter and franchise subject to the implied right of the state to establish and open such streets and highways over and across its right of way as public convenience and necessity may require; and that right on the part of the state attaches, by implication of law, to the franchise of the railroad company, and imposes upon it an obligation to construct and maintain at its own expense such suitable crossings at new streets and highways to the same extent as required by the rules of the common law at streets and highways in existence when the railroad was constructed. State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28: 298, 108 N. W. 261, 98 Minn. 380.

Contributory negligence.

Instruction as to contributory negligence, see Trial, 20.

See also supra, 5.

10. Contributory negligence, as matter of law, is not shown by proof that plaintiff in attempting to stop a horse attached to a wagon, but without a driver, which he saw approaching a much used railroad crossing, was injured by being jerked, by the horse in its flight from an approaching train which came suddenly into view around a nearby sharp curve at a high rate of speed and with whistle blowing, in front of, and struck by, such train, where it also appears that plaintiff, when stopping the horse, was not upon the track nor near enough to be struck by a train, and did not intend to go upon the track, but only to back the horse to a place of safety. Campbell v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 28: 346, 121 N. W. 429, 108 Minn. 104.

(Annotated)

11. A railroad company cannot be held liable for the death of one who drives on the track upon a railroad crossing without looking or listening for approaching trains, because he was unfamiliar with the country, where it omits the performance of no duty which it owes him. Anspach v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 28: 382, 74 Atl. 373, 225 Pa. 528.

(Annotated)

12. One who goes near enough to a railroad track to be in danger from any source is bound to exercise due care to avoid harm, but this does not require that such person must stop, look, and listen, and continue to look under all circumstances and at all times, nor is such person bound to anticipate negligence in the operation of the trains thereon. Campbell v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 28: 346, 121 N. W. 429, 108 Minn. 104.

RATES.

Injunction against filing, of interstate commerce commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.

RATIFICATION.

Of contract, see Contracts, 25-27.

Of agent's act, see Principal and Agent, 5.

REAL-ESTATE BROKERS.

See Brokers.

REAL PROPERTY.

Option to purchase, see Contracts, 6, 9, 10.

Validity under statute of frauds of contracts as to, see Contracts, 12, 13, 15, 16.

Damages for injuries to, see Damages, 4, 5.

Deeds of, see Deeds.

When statute of limitations begins to run in action respecting, see Limitation of Actions, 4.

Partition of, see Partition.

Records of title, see Records and Recording Laws.

Sale of, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Estates or interests created by will, see Wills, 7-9.

REBUTTAL.

Rebuttal evidence, see Evidence, 47.

RECEIVERS.

Appeal from decrees affecting members of club in hands of receivers, see Appeal and Error, 1.

Of social clubs, see Clubs, 1.

Bill in equity on behalf of receiver of club to recover dues from members, see Equity, 3, 4.

RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY.

Under a statute making it a crime to purchase any horse with intent to defraud the owner, which is known by the purchaser to have been stolen, a conviction may be had upon proof that stolen horses were bought with the necessary guilty knowledge and fraudulent intent, though the theft occurred in another state, and notwithstanding it is not a crime to bring stolen property into the prosecuting state, since receiving and buying stolen property is an independent substantive offense. Ex parte Sullivan, 28: 750, 121 N. W. 456, 84 Neb. 493. (Annotated)

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.

Record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2-4.

Right to removal of mortgage from, see Mortgage, 5.

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Priority as between unrecorded contract for purchase and prior unrecorded option, see Specific Performance, 1.

The recordation of a mortgage which purports to relate exclusively to the property of a married woman is not notice to strangers of the fact that property of her husband is included therein, so as to prevent their securing a good title from him in case the property was so included without his authority. W. F. Taylor Co. v. Sample, 28: 289, 48 So. 439, 122 La. 1016.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

One who as heir of the deceased owner of a tax-sale certificate took out a tax deed thereon, wherein the name of the deceased person was inserted as grantee, cannot maintain an equitable action to have the deed reformed by a decree substituting her own name as grantee therein, since she might, upon due application to the county clerk, have obtained a deed made to herself as grantee, notwithstanding the issuance of the former instrument. Baker v. Lane, 28: 405, 109 Pac. 182, 82 Kan. 715.

REGISTRATION.

Effect on rights of voters of destruction of registration papers, see Voters and Elections, 1.

RELATIVES.

Fiduciary relation between, see Evidence, 3, 4.

RELEASE.

Of surety, see Principal and Surety, 1.
Of purchase-money note secured by mortgage, see Usury, 1.

RELEVANCY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 39-48.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Slander of clergymen, see Libel and Slander, 1.

REMAINDERMEN.

Right of one to compel partition during existence of life estate, see Partition.

REMEDIES.

Of parties to sale, see Sale.

RENEWAL.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 3, 4.
Effect of renewing lease without reserving right to remove fixtures, see Landlord and Tenant.

REPLEVIN.

Action for malicious prosecution against one wrongfully instituting replevin action, see Replevin.

REPRESENTATIONS.

By insured, see Insurance.

REPUTATION.

Proof of to discredit witness, see Witnesses, 4.

RESCISSION.

Of contract to sell real estate, see Evidence, 20.

Of land contract, see Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

RESISTING OFFICER.

See Obstructing Justice.

RES JUDICATA.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 2-4.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

See Master and Servant, 21-26.

RETAINING JURISDICTION.

See Equity, 5.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-31.

REVOCATION.

Of permit to obstruct sidewalks, see Highways, 2.

ROUTE.

Duty of carrier's agent to instruct passenger as to, see Carriers, 1, 2,

SALARY.

Statute regulating assignments of, see Constitutional Law, 2, 7.

SALE.

On foreclosure, see Mortgage, 8.

By agent, see Principal and Agent, 1, 2, 4; Trial, 13.

For taxes, see Taxes, 5, 6.

Of land generally, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Passing of title; delivery.

1. Change of possession of a warehouse on leased land, and its contents, is effected by a delivery of the key, and ceasing to exercise control over the property. Western Min. Supply Co. v. Quinn, 28: 214, 105 Pac. 732, 40 Mont. 156.

2. Delivery of possession of chattels under a contract of sale is sufficient as against an attachment, if made prior to the time it is levied, although the sale is not accompanied by immediate delivery, as required by statute. Western Min. Supply Co. v. Quinn, 28: 214, 105 Pac. 732, 40 Mont. 156. (Annotated)

Rights and remedies of parties.

Effect of recovery by seller on wrong theory, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Breach of parol warranty as defense to action on note for purchase price see Bills and Notes, 5.

Construction of contract for, see Contracts, 20.

Measure of damages for breach of contract, see Damages, 1, 7.

Evidence of custom to show that unconditional acceptance of order was subject to condition, see Evidence, 39.

What constitutes fraud justifying rescission, see Fraud and Deceit, 1.

3. In determining the question whether or not a seller has complied with his contract to ship goods ordered within a reasonable time, the fact of difficulty in getting cars because of shortage on the part of the carrier should be considered, and also the fact that the goods were to be shipped through mountains in the winter. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28: 1007, 108 Pac. 621, — Wash. —.

4. Acceptance of an order for goods f. o. b. requires the seller to procure and load the cars. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28: 1007, 108 Pac. 621, — Wash. —.

5. Although the vendor under an executory contract to sell and deliver goods on credit may, if the purchaser default on an existing indebtedness, treat the sale as one for cash, he must, where the executory vendee has repudiated the contract before time for tender at the delivery point, in order to entitle him to liquidate his damages by a sale of the goods as the property of such vendee, and maintain an action for the balance of the purchase price, comply with the terms of the agreement as to time and place of delivery. Lincoln v. Charles Alshuler Mfg. Co. 28: 780, 125 N. W. 908, 142 Wis. 475.

6. The remedy of an executory vendor for refusal of his vendee to carry out his agreement to purchase a specified quantity of the ordinary output of a manufacturer is for damages for the breach, where the particular goods to satisfy the agreement have not, prior to the breach, been segregated from the general stock, and not for the purchase price. Lincoln v. Charles Alshuler Mfg. Co. 28: 780, 125 N. W. 908, 142 Wis. 475.

Rights as to third parties.

7. One who in good faith purchases diamond earrings, paying a cash consideration, from a diamond setter in whose hands they have been placed with the right to sell and pay a specified sum therefor, or to dissolve the transaction by a return of the goods within a reasonable time, acquires a good title, since the transaction constitutes a "sale and return," the right to return the goods and dissolve the transaction being a condition subsequent. Frantz v. Fink, 28: 539, 52 So. 131, 125 La. 1013.

8. Mere possession of personal property is not such indictum of ownership as will enable the possessor to convey a good title as against the true owner. Frantz v. Fink, 28: 539, 52 So. 131, 125 La. 1013.

9. A dealer who places diamond earrings in the hands of a diamond setter who is not a retailer, with power to sell and pay a specified sum therefor, or to dissolve the transaction by a return of the goods within a specified time, may recover such earrings from one who has redeemed them, at the request of the diamond setter, from a pawn-broker with whom he had unlawfully pledged them, as a means of settlement for other jewelry which the diamond setter had embezzled from the redeemer, since in such case he is put upon inquiry as to the possible right of other persons in the property. Frantz v. Fink, 28: 539, 52 So. 131, 125 La. 1013.

SCAFFOLD.

Presumption of negligence from fall of, see Evidence, 17.

SCIAGRAPH.

Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 29.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Review of conviction for resisting execution of search warrant, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Resisting officer in execution of search warrant, see Obstructing Justice.

A warrant to search for liquors alleged to be illegally kept for sale, issued without a supporting affidavit, is not so far void as to justify resistance of its execution. Appling v. State, 28: 548, 128 S. W. 866, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

SECOND APPEAL.

See Appeal and Error, 35, 36.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 23.

SEIZURE.

See Search and Seizure.

SEPARATION.

See Divorce and Separation.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

By bank against its own claim of deposit by bankrupt of fund for creditors, see Banks, 3.

In partnership accounting, see Partnership.

SHOOTING.

Of trespasser by servant, see Master and Servant, 21-23.

SICKNESS.

Right of servant to recover for time lost through illness, see Master and Servant, 1.

SIGNALS.

At railroad crossings, see Evidence, 53.

SIGNATURE.

Effect of signing name to contract to make one a party thereto, see Contracts, 2.

Of testator, see Wills, 1.

SILFENCE.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 2.

28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

SLANDER.

See Libel and Slander.

SOCIAL CLUBS.

See Clubs.

SOMNAMBULISM.

Effect of, on liability for murder, see Criminal Law, 1.

SPECIAL FINDINGS.

By jury, see Trial, 22.

SPECIAL INJURY.

As condition of right to maintain private action for nuisance, see Nuisance.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Mutuality of contract, see Contracts, 7.
Validity of contract under statute of frauds, see Contracts, 16.

Effect of decree for performance of option contract on rights of one claiming under intermediate contract who was not party to suit, see Judgment, 3.

1. An unrecorded contract for the purchase of real estate has no priority over a prior unrecorded option upon the same property, which will prevent specific performance of the option. Smith v. Bangham, 28: 522, 104 Pac. 689, 156 Cal. 359.

2. The inadequacy of the consideration for an option to purchase real estate cannot defeat the right to performance of the contract to convey after the option has been accepted, if the price to be paid for the land is adequate. Smith v. Bangham, 28: 522, 104 Pac. 689, 156 Cal. 359.

SPLITTING.

Of cause of action, see Action or Suit, 2.

SPRINKLER.

Provision in insurance policy as to maintaining, see Insurance, 2, 3.

SPUR TRACK.

Requiring railroad company to construct, to private property, see Constitutional Law, 6, 6.

STATE.

1. Under a constitutional provision that the legislature shall not create any debt or liability which shall exceed a specified per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property in the state, the legislature, when passing an act authorizing the issuance of bonds, must be governed by the assessed value of the taxable property as the same has been ascertained and then exists, and not with reference to the possible assessed value at or after the time when the legislative act authorizes the sale of the bonds, as the legislature cannot anticipate the future and leave it within the power of ministerial and executive officers to swell the total assessed value, that they may sell state bonds at their pleasure. Lewis v. Brady, 28: 149, 104 Pac. 900, 17 Idaho, 251.

2. The words "debt" and "liability" in Idaho Const., art. 8, § 1, which provides that the legislature shall not create any debt or liability which shall exceed a specified per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property in the state, are used not in a technical sense, but in the sense that the debt or liability is created at the date of the passage of an act authorizing an expenditure, so that the validity of an act authorizing the issuance of bonds must be determined as based on the assessed valuation at the date of the passage of the act, and not at the time of the issuance of the bonds. Lewis v. Brady, 28: 149, 104 Pac. 900, 17 Idaho, 251. (Annotated)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See Contracts.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

See Limitation of Actions.

STATUTES.

Construction of statute as to inspection of paper, see Discovery and Inspection.

Validity of statute imposing license tax on corporations, see License, 1, 2.

As to repeal of ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, 1.

To overthrow a tax law on the ground that it violates the Constitution, it must be clearly shown to do so. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369.

STREET RAILWAYS.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Review by courts of orders of railroad commission as to crossing of railroad by, see Courts, 1.

Construction of subway in street by, see Highways, 3.

Mandamus to compel compliance with order of state railroad commission to construct subway beneath tracks of railroad, see Parties, 2.

Crossing of railroad tracks by, see Railroads, 2-4.

STREETS.

See Highways.

STRIKING OUT.

Of party, see Dismissal and Discontinuance, 2.

Of pleading, see Pleading, 3.

SUBROGATION.

Of owner of half interest tendering amount of mortgage on other half, see Mortgage, 1.

The owner of a half interest in a parcel of real estate will not lose his right to subrogation to the rights of a mortgagee 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) on the other half interest, by paying the amount due into court in a proceeding for the foreclosure of the mortgage, without making a formal tender thereof to the mortgagee. Murray v. O'Brien, 28: 998, 105 Pac. 840, 56 Wash. 361.

SUBSCRIPTION.

To wills, see Wills, 1.

SUBWAY.

Construction of, in street, see Highways, 3.

Construction of, by street railway under railroad tracks, see Railroads, 2-4.

SUCCESSIVE SUITS.

See Action or Suit, 2.

SUMMONS.

See Writ and Process.

SUNDAY.

Sale of liquors on, see Intoxicating Liquors, 2.

Mandamus to compel enforcement of Sunday law, see Mandamus, 3.

SUPPORT.

Cancellation of deed given in consideration of agreement for, see Cancellation of Instruments, 2.

Lien in case of conveyance in consideration of agreement to support grantor, see Vendor and Purchaser, 5.

SURETYSHIP.

See Principal and Surety.

SURGEONS.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

TAX COLLECTOR.

Right of sureties on bond of, to recover for loss caused by negligence of other public officer, see Principal and Surety, 2, 3.

TAXES.

Assumpsit to recover illegal tax, see Assumpsit, 2.

Assessments for public improvements, see Public Improvements.

Validity of tax law, see Statutes.

Equality; uniformity.

Uniformity and equality as to license tax, see License, 8, 9.

1. The mere right to be a corporation is not within the operation of a constitutional provision for uniform and equal taxation, so that every person or corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his or its property. Blackrock Copper Min. & M. Co. v. Tingey, 28: 255, 98 Pac. 180, 34 Utah, 369.

What taxable.

2. The finished product of a manufacturer is subject to taxation, under a statute defining "property" as including every kind of property subject to ownership, and providing that all property "not expressly exempted" "shall be subject to taxation in the manner provided in this act," where not expressly exempted, although not mentioned in the act, as the clause, "in the manner provided in this act," relates to the method of imposing taxes upon property already declared to be subject to taxation, instead of limiting the right to tax to the kinds of property specially named in the act. State ex rel. Taggart v. Holcomb, 28: 251, 106 Pac. 1030, 81 Kan. 879.

(Annotated)

3. A corporation organized for the personal convenience of its largest stockholder, to take and hold title to his real estate, upon one parcel of which a dwelling house is in process of construction, is within the operation of a statute requiring every corporation to pay an annual franchise tax computed upon the basis of the amount of its capital employed in the state, although it transacted no business. People ex rel. — Wacklark Realty Co. v. Williams, 28: 371, 91 N. E. 266, 198 N. Y. 54. (Annotated)

Assessment: omitted property.

Mandamus to compel placing of omitted property upon tax rolls, see Mandamus, 4.

4. Taxable property not listed for taxation nor returned by the assessor may be added to the tax rolls by the county clerk after the settlement of the county treasurer in October of the year the assessment should have been made, and after the tax rolls have been turned over to the county treasurer, where proceedings to make the correction were commenced in August of that year, and the reason for the delay was the opposition of the owner, notwithstanding a statute providing that an assessment may be corrected and omitted property added "at any time before the final settlement with the county treasurer," since a property owner cannot escape taxation by contesting the right to tax beyond the time fixed by law for making the assessment, and the county clerk cannot, by failure to perform his duty, nullify the statute imposing it. State ex rel. Taggart v. Holcomb, 28: 251, 106 Pac. 1030, 81 Kan. 879.

Sale: deed; rights of purchasers.

Adverse possession as against purchaser at tax sale, see Adverse Possession, 2.

Right of heir of grantee in tax deed to maintain action to quiet title, see Cloud on Title.

Right of one in possession under tax deed to allowance for improvements on eviction by landowner, see Ejectment.

Tax deed as giving prima facie right of possession, see Evidence, 22.

Reformation of tax deed, see Reformation of Instruments.

Trespass by holder of tax deed, see Trespass, 1, 2.

5. A tax deed to a deceased person and his heirs and assigns does not vest title 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) in the heirs of such deceased person, but is void as a conveyance. Baker v. Lane, 28: 405, 109 Pac. 182, 82 Kan. 715.

(Annotated)

6. A tax deed has no more force or effect as a writ of assistance for procuring the possession of real estate than any other deed, and the holder of such deed who finds the property occupied must, if the occupant refuses to surrender possession, resort to the same legal remedy for possession as the holder of any other deed would employ. Steltz v. Morgan, 28: 398, 101 Pac. 1057, 16 Idaho, 308.

TAXPAYERS.

Permitting resident taxpayers to serve on jury in action against city, see Appeal and Error, 30; Jury, 2.

TELEGRAPHS.

Question for jury as to whether telegram is tendered after close of office of destination, see Trial, 10.

Failure to transmit; delay.

1. A telegraph company receiving a message for transmission, with notice that it is important that it go forward promptly, is bound to notify the sender if an obstacle to speedy transmission arises. Box v. Postal Telegr.—Cable Co. 28: 566, 165 Fed. 138, 91 C. C. A. 172.

2. A telegraph company which receives for transmission an important message, with notice that failure to deliver it by a certain time will cause loss, and promises to notify the sender by telephone when it is sent, and subsequently erroneously states in answer to his call, at a time when other avenues of communication were still open to him, that it had been sent, cannot escape liability for the loss occasioned by failure to transmit the message in time. Box v. Postal Telegr.—Cable Co. 28: 566, 165 Fed. 138, 91 C. C. A. 172.

Stipulations and conditions.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws, 1.

3. A telegraph company cannot avoid liability for full damages for failure to transmit a message within the stipulated time, under a rule limiting its liability to the amount received for transmission in case of mistake or delay in the transmission of unrepeatable messages. Box v. Postal Telegr.—Cable Co. 28: 566, 165 Fed. 138, 91 C. C. A. 172. (Annotated)

TELEPHONES.

Burden of proof in action for failure promptly to make connection for customer, see Evidence, 18.

Liability for fright of horse by object left in street by telephone company, see Highways, 5, 7.

License tax on telephone company, see License, 4-7.

Repeal of ordinance as to taxation of franchise of company, see Municipal Corporations, 1.

Failure to connect subscriber with fire department, see Proximate Cause, 1.

TENDER.

Of amount due on mortgage, see Mortgage, 1-6.

Effect of failure to make formal tender to mortgagee on right of one paying amount into court to subrogation, see Subrogation.

THEFT.

Receiving stolen property, see Receiving Stolen Property.

TIMBER.

Effect of invalidity of contract for cutting on public land on validity of other contract arising therefrom, see Contracts, 28.

TIME.

For demand for performance of contract, see Contracts, 10.

Parol evidence to vary terms of written contract as to, see Evidence, 30.

For adding omitted property to tax roll, see Taxes, 4.

For objections, see Trial, 2.

For determination of remaindermen under will, see Wills, 6.

TITLE.

Record of, see Records and Recording Laws.

Of personal property, passing of, see Sale, 1, 2.

FONTINE POLICY.

Right of holder to accounting, see Accounting; Judgment, 1; Parties, 4; Pleading, 3.

TRADEMARK.

See also Tradename.

A person may bona fide use his own name upon marks or brands placed upon articles of his own manufacture, although it has first been rightfully used by another who had established the reputation of, and built up a trade in, like articles by the use of the same name in a trademark, sign, or label thereon; but he cannot by artifice, device, or otherwise, induce or attempt to induce the belief in customers or others desiring to purchase, that the articles so marked are the product of the other. Aetna Mill & E. Co. v. Kramer Milling Co. 28: 934, 109 Pac. 692, 82 Kan. 679.

TRADENAMES.

See also Trademarks.

A name like "Finney's Orchestra" may be protected against unfair competition by those whose efforts have made it valuable, although the one who originated the organization and gave it his name is dead. Finney's Orchestra v. Finney's Famous Orchestra, 28: 458, 126 N. W. 198, — Mich. — (Annotated)

28 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TREES.

Damages for destruction of shade trees, see Damages, 5.

Evidence on questions of damages for injury to, see Evidence, 43.

TRESPASS.

Suit on implied contract as waiver of remedy in trespass, see Contracts, 3.

1. The holder of a tax title to real estate, who finds the property unoccupied, may enter upon and take actual possession of the premises, and, in doing so, he is not liable to the original owner of the property, whose title has been divested by the tax deed. Steltz v. Morgan, 28: 398, 101 Pac. 1057, 16 Idaho, 368. (Annotated)

2. In order for one who was the original owner of real estate, and whose title has been divested through taxation and a tax deed, to maintain an action of trespass against the holder of a valid tax deed for entering into possession of the premises, such original owner must maintain and be in actual possession of the premises at the time of the trespass. Steltz v. Morgan, 28: 398, 101 Pac. 1057, 16 Idaho, 368.

3. Under an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, where the plaintiff does not allege title either in fee or for a term in himself, he must show actual possession of the realty at the time of the trespass. Steltz v. Morgan, 28: 398, 101 Pac. 1057, 16 Idaho, 368.

TRESPASSER.

Liability for injury to, by electric shock, see Electricity, 3.

Shooting of, by servant, see Master and Servant, 21-23.

TRIAL.

New trial, see New Trial.

Objections and exceptions.

1. One offering a deposition against a claim in the probate court cannot complain that depositions are admitted in support of the claim. Re McVickery, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.

2. Objection to the form of the oath administered to the jury to try a civil action cannot be made for the first time after verdict. First Nat. Bank v. Lowther-Kaufman Oil & C. Co. 28: 511, 66 S. E. 713, 66 W. Va. 505.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury.

Taking case from jury, see infra, 14, 15.

3. The presumption of care on the part of one killed through the alleged negligence of another, where there is no witness of the accident, is sufficient to take to the jury the question of the absence of contributory negligence on his part, in the absence of clear and unmistakable proof of the contrary. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

4. Evidence of the explosion, to the injury of the purchaser of a bottle of carbonated beverage, accompanied by evidence that other bottles put up by the same bottler had exploded during the several preceding months, is sufficient to carry to the jury the question of the latter's negligence, in an action to hold him liable for the injury. Dail v. Taylor, 28: 949, 66 S. E. 135, 151 N. C. 284.

5. The mere explosion of a bottle of carbonated beverage to the injury of a purchaser is not sufficient to carry to the jury the question of the negligence of the one who bottled it, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Dail v. Taylor, 28: 949, 66 S. E. 135, 151 N. C. 284.

Questions of law and fact.

Question for jury as to passenger's negligence, see Carriers, 8.

Question for jury as to ratification of contract, see Contracts, 25.

6. The court, and not the jury, must construe a contract all of which is in writing. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28: 1007, 108 Pac. 621, — Wash. —.

7. The question of a master's negligence in storing powder, dynamite, and dynamite caps in dangerous quantities in the room provided for the storing of workmen's tools, clothing, and lunches, and which is used by them for refuge from storms, is for the jury. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

8. The question of the assumption of risk on the part of an employee whose duties require him to be near stored dynamite is for the jury, where he was inexperienced, and not shown to have appreciated the gravity of his peril. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co. 28: 1260, 120 N. W. 732, — Iowa, —.

9. A shipper who delivers cattle to a carrier for transportation, with the understanding that a written contract will be signed, cannot be held, as matter of law, to have bound himself, by general preliminary negotiations relating to the shipment, to sign a special written contract limiting the carrier's common-law liability, although he had been a regular shipper of cattle for years, and intended to sign a contract of the kind he had theretofore used, where it appears that he was not familiar with the terms of such contracts and that the carrier did not have a standard form of contract which it invariably used. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 28: 637, 100 Pac. 647, 79 Kan. 643.

10. Whether or not a telegram was tendered for transmission after the close of the hours of the office of destination is for the jury where the evidence tends to show that it was tendered about 6 o'clock P. M., and that the hours of the office at destination terminated usually at 6 or 6:30 P. M., but might on occasions continue until late in the evening. Box v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 28: 566, 165 Fed. 138, 91 C. C. A. 172.

11. The question is for the jury whether or not reasonable inspection, on the part of the owner of a building, of a fire escape which had been erected by an independent contractor, would have revealed a defect in the fastenings and permitted the defect to be remedied prior to the injury of a servant through the attempted use of the appliance, for which the owner is sought to be held liable. Winslow v. Commercial Bldg. Co. 28: 563, 124 N. W. 320, — Iowa. —.

12. The sufficiency of the consideration for a contract is for the determination of the court, and not the jury. Evans v. Oregon & W. R. Co. 28: 455, 108 Pac. 1095, — Wash. —.

13. The jury must determine whether or not the authority of an agent in possession of a horse for purposes of sale includes apparent authority to take notes payable to himself for the purchase price, where there is nothing to show that he might not have taken cash in payment. Galbraith v. Weber. 28: 341, 107 Pac. 1050, — Wash. —.

(Annotated)

Taking case from jury.

Waiver of right to jury trial by motions for directed verdict, see Jury, 1.

Construction of motion to instruct jury to find verdict for defendant, see Motions and Orders.

Assignment of error in motion for new trial in refusing to direct verdict, see New Trial, 2.

14. The court cannot direct a verdict for an insurance company in an action on a policy upon the life of one who has been absent from his home for more than seven years, merely because of evidence that the absentee has been seen within that time, since the question of the credibility of such evidence is for the jury. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

15. An acquittal should be directed on request in a criminal prosecution, where the evidence only raises a mere suspicion of guilt. High v. State, 28: 162, 101 Pac. 115, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 161.

Instructions.

Sufficiency of assignment of error in overruling motion to instruct, see Appeal and Error, 4.

Estoppel to complain of, see Appeal and Error, 11.

Reversible error as to instructions, see Appeal and Error, 21, 28, 29.

16. An instruction should not be given where there is no evidence to support it. Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28: 1207, 126 S. W. 1037, 227 Mo. 347.

17. An instruction allowing one who has sold his land to recover only such damages for injuries thereto caused by the building of a railway grade thereon prior to the sale, as may have accrued between the building of such grade and the time of such sale, is erroneous, since the purchaser took whatever portion of the land he acquired as it existed at the time of sale, and could not recover for the original wrong; and, moreover, when the road was completed the grade from which the injury flowed was patent, obvious, and of a permanent nature, in which case the whole damages, past, present, and prospective, must be recovered in one action. Boisé Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28: 968, 105 Pac. 1070, 17 Idaho, 384.

18. The addition of the statement that no liability can attach for the result of unusual rains or extraordinary freshets to an instruction, in an action for damages for unlawfully damming back flood waters, that the builder of a bridge over a stream is required to leave openings for the passage of all water reasonably to be expected to flow therein, renders the instruction as a whole materially erroneous, in the absence of further explanation, since the term "extraordinary freshets" as used is misleading, unless understood to include only those so outside of ordinary experience that their occurrence could not reasonably have been anticipated; and in the absence of specific instruction it cannot be assumed that the jury gave it that force, the word "unusual" in connection therewith being insufficient to imply that significance. Broadway Mfg. Co. v. Leavenworth Terminal R. & B. Co. 28: 156, 106 Pac. 1034, 81 Kan. 616.

19. The court cannot enter into particulars in instructing the jury in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, so as to inform them just what acts would be negligent and what would not. McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 28: 1244, 104 Pac. 801, 55 Wash. 495.

20. In an action for being injured at a much used railroad crossing by being jerked in front of a train by a driverless horse attached to a wagon, which plaintiff was attempting to stop as it approached the crossing, whose course was diverted by the train, which came suddenly into view around a nearby sharp curve at a high rate of speed, with whistle blowing, an instruction that the plaintiff was bound to exercise ordinary care at all times up to the time of the accident, and that, if he had notice or knowledge that the train was approaching, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have taken notice, in coming upon the track he would have been guilty of contributory negligence sufficient to bar recovery, is as favorable to defendant as warrantable, where it also appears that plaintiff, when stopping the horse, was not upon the track nor near enough to be struck by a train, and did not intend to go upon the track. Campbell v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 28: 346, 121 N. W. 429, 108 Minn. 104.

Findings by court.

Review of findings on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 18.

21. A finding that a written contract is void as against public policy is one of law, and not of fact. Re McVicker, 28: 1112, 91 N. E. 1041, 245 Ill. 180.
28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Verdict or findings of jury.

Raising question for review on appeal by motion to set aside verdict, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Review of verdict on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 16, 17.

22. A party is entitled to have a jury make special findings of the ultimate facts of the case, but has no right to ask for mere evidentiary matters, nor that the jury shall file a bill of particulars as to each fact. Matheney v. Eldorado, 28: 980, 109 Pac. 166, 82 Kan. 720.

23. A jury, by returning a verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by being thrown to the ground upon stepping from a moving train, cannot be said to have violated an instruction that it is contributory negligence, as matter of law, for a passenger on a train to undertake "to alight from it in the darkness of the night," while it is in motion, without any light to guide his steps, in that the jury disregarded the element of darkness, where they also find that it was light enough for him to see where he was stepping, although the accident occurred between half past three and four o'clock on a July morning. Walters v. Missouri P. R. Co. 28: 1058, 109 Pac. 173, 82 Kan. 739.

TROVER.

Conversion by bailee, see Bailment.

Sufficiency of pleading to show conversion, see Pleading, 7.

TRUSTEES

In bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy, 2.

TRUSTS.

Bank's duty as to trust funds, see Banks, 3.

For married woman, see Covenants and Conditions, 2; Husband and Wife.

UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL.

See Principal and Agent, 4.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

See Evidence, 11; Wills, 2.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

See Tradename.

UNIFORMITY.

Of license tax, see License, 8, 9.

In taxation generally, see Taxes, 1.

USURY.

Statute forbidding assignment of wages given as security for loan tainted with, see Constitutional Law, 2.

1. Exactng payment of the legal interest which will accrue, prior to the maturity of the debt, as a condition to accepting payment of the principal and releasing purchase-money notes secured by mortgage on real estate, does not constitute usury. Smithwick v. Whitley, 28: 113, 67 S. E. 914, 152 N. C. 366. (Annotated)

2. The difference between the cash and the credit price on a sale of property may be put into the form of interest on a note given for the purchase price, without violating the usury law, although the per cent agreed upon is greater than the lawful rate of interest. Davidson v. Davis, 28: 102, 52 So. 139, — Fla. —. (Annotated)

VENDING MACHINE.

License tax on, see License, 9.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Action by vendee against one inducing vendor to break contract, see Case.

Mutuality of contract, see Contract, 6, 7.

Option to purchase property, see Contracts, 6, 9, 10.

Oral contracts for land, see Contracts, 11, 12.

Sufficiency of writing in case of contract for purchase or sale of land, see Contracts, 13, 15, 16.

Effect of part performance of contract void under statute of frauds, see Contracts, 16.

Restraints upon alienation, see Covenants and Conditions, 2.

Deeds, see Deeds.

Sale under execution or attachment, see Judicial Sale.

Sale of land by agent, see Principal and Agent, 3.

Sale for taxes, see Taxes, 5, 6.

Right, as between vendor and vendee, to damages for building of grade on land prior to sale, see Trial, 17.

Putting difference between cash and credit price of property into form of interest, see Usury, 2.

1. The right of the grantee of a lot on a recorded plat is not limited to the adjoining street and the connections necessary to reach a public highway, but extends to the use of all the ways appearing upon the plat, and none can be closed against his protest, if it can be of material benefit to his lot. Danielson v. Sykes, 28: 1024, 109 Pac. 87, — Cal. —.

Payment of purchase money.

2. The vendor in a land contract providing for payment in instalments and reserving the right of forfeiture for default, making time of the essence of the contract, may enforce the forfeiture for default in the last instalment, and retain the payments made, if he is not himself in default with respect to the contract obligations as to abstract of title and delivery of deed. Reese v. Westfield, 28: 956, 105 Pac. 837, 56 Wash. 415.

Deficiency in quantity.

Abatement of price on judicial sale because of deficiency in quantity, see Judicial Sale, 2; Limitation of Actions, 2.

3. In the sale by the acre of valuable farm lands only such allowance should be made for inaccuracies as to amount of land sold as, considering the inequality of the ground and other obstacles hindering an accurate survey, may reasonably be imputable to variations of instruments and small errors in survey. Singleton v. Castleman, 28: 393, 68 S. E. 34, — W. Va. —.

Rescission of contract.

Burden of proof in action to set aside deed, see Evidence, 20.

4. A representation by one claiming a tax title to real estate, that the title is perfect,—made for the purpose of securing a conveyance in form by the true owners, for a nominal consideration,—which can only be true in case the land was vacant and unoccupied during the period necessary to perfect the title under the statute, involves a representation that it was so in fact; and if such representation was false, the one making it is guilty of fraud in law, which will entitle the grantor to a rescission of the contract, although the one making it had no knowledge on the subject, and believed it to be true. Kathan v. Comstock, 28: 201, 122 N. W. 1044, 140 Wis. 427. (Annotated)

Vendor's lien.

Agreement for support in consideration of conveyance as basis for lien, see also Cancellation of Instruments, 2.

5. No vendor's lien exists where the consideration for the conveyance of land is an agreement to support the grantor during life. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 28: 677, 50 So. 1025, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

Rights of parties as to third persons: bona fide purchasers.

6. A grantee of the maker of a plat of building lots cannot close an alley against the protest of a grantee of one of the lots, because of uncertainty as to whether or not the alley will ever be of any benefit to the lot. Danielson v. Sykes, 28: 1024, 109 Pac. 87, — Cal. —.

VERDICT.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 16, 17.

In general, see Trial, 22, 23.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See Elections.

WAGES.

Recovery of, by discharged employee, see Assumpsit, 1.

Statute regulating assignments of, see Constitutional Law, 2, 7.

Agreement by third party to pay, see Contracts, 28.

Right of servant to recover for time lost through illness, see Master and Servant, 1.

WAIVER.

Of statutory period after notice of bill of exceptions in which to file objections and amendments thereto, see Appeal and Error, 8.

Of provision as to bringing of action within certain time after proofs of death, see Insurance, 6.

Of right to jury trial, see Jury, 1.

Of notice to master of injury to servant, see Master and Servant, 2.

WAREHOUSE.

Sale of warehouse on leased land, see Sale, 1.

WARRANT.

Of commitment, see Criminal Law, 2.

WARRANTY.

Breach of parol warranty as defense to action on note, see Bills and Notes, 5.

In insurance contract, see Insurance.

WATCHMAN.

Master's liability for shooting by, see Master and Servant, 21-23.

WATERS.

Use of waters for logging generally, see Logs and Logging.

Rights as between public and individuals.

1. The public cannot, after granting the bed of the outlet of a pond to private owners, use the water in the pond to the injury of such owners, without making compensation to them, although it retains title to the bed of the pond. Taggart v. Jaffrey, 28: 1050, 76 Atl. 123, 75 N. H. 473.

Rights as between individuals.

When action for damages resulting from flooding accrues, see Limitation of Actions, 4.

Instructions in action for damming back flood waters, see Trial, 18.

2. The rights of an owner of land on an artificial channel made for a stream of water which was evidently intended to be permanent, and has existed for more than sixty years, are the same as though the course was the natural one. Taggart v. Jaffrey, 28: 1050, 76 Atl. 123, 75 N. H. 473.

3. The fact that proper conservation of the water left in a stream would render it sufficient to serve the purpose to which a complaining riparian owner was putting the stream is no defense to an action by him for wrongful diversion of water from the stream. Taggart v. Jaffrey, 28: 1050, 76 Atl. 123, 75 N. H. 473.

4. The duty of the builder of a bridge over a water course does not necessarily end with making provision for the escape of so much water as can be carried within the channel, since, if there is reason to anticipate that the stream will at times overflow its banks, he must also, if practicable, provide an outlet for the flood water; and for failure so to do he is liable for the consequent damages. Broadway Mfg. Co. v. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Leavenworth Terminal R. & B. Co. 28: 156, 106 Pac. 1034, 81 Kan. 618. (Annotated)

WILLS.

Bequest for masses, see Charities, 1, 3, 4.

Statute requiring devise to be made directly to beneficiary, see Charities, 2.

Retaining suit for other relief other than that asked for, see Equity, 5.

Parol evidence to show intent of testator, see Evidence, 31, 32.

Evidence in prosecution for forgery of, see Evidence, 37.

Establishment of identity of sheets of will, see Evidence, 8.

Execution as lien upon legacy, see Execution, 1.

Power of servitor of incompetent to adeem legacies, see Incompetent Persons.

Necessary parties in suit to construe will, see Parties, 5.

Signature of testator.

1. A will which there is evidence tending to show had been duly signed in ink by the testator below the attestation clause, in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, and a few weeks later delivered by him to the executrix, who retained possession of it until the testator's death, was properly admitted to probate, although, when produced for that purpose, the testator's signature had been partially erased by knife scratches and written in pencil above the attestation clause, apparently by the testator, although when, by whom, or with what purpose, was not shown. Kirby v. Sellards, 28: 270, 108 Pac. 73, 82 Kan. 291.

Undue Influence.

Presumption of undue influence, see Evidence, 11.

2. That a will is drafted by a daughter of the testator, who shares its benefits equally with the other children, and who is not shown to have occupied a position of confidence and trust toward her father beyond that arising from their relationship, does not bring the will within the statutory provision that a will written by the principal beneficiary, who is the confidential agent or legal adviser of the testator, or who occupies any other position of confidence or trust to him, shall not be valid unless it affirmatively appear that the testator knew the contents and had independent advice with reference thereto. Kirby v. Sellards, 28: 270, 108 Pac. 73, 82 Kan. 291.

Probate: contest.

3. A statute making void a devise or bequest to a witness to a will which cannot be proved without his testimony does not apply to persons other than attesting witnesses called upon to testify when the will is offered for probate. Kirby v. Sellards, 28: 270, 108 Pac. 73, 82 Kan. 291.

Construction generally.

4. The construction of a will should in case of doubt be in favor of the first rather than of the second taker, and of a general or primary intent rather than of a particular or secondary one. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Bobloski, 28: 1093, 76 Atl. 720, 228 Pa. 52.

Description of beneficiaries; who may take.

5. Under a bequest to the nearest of kin of testator, his brothers and sisters will take to the exclusion of children of deceased brothers and sisters. Clark v. Mack, 28: 479, 126 N. W. 632, — Mich. —.

(Annotated)

6. Under a gift of property to one for life, remainder to testator's next of kin, the remaindermen will be determined at the death of testator, and not at that of the life tenant. (Clark v. Mack, 28: 479, 126 N. W. 632, — Mich. —.

Nature of estate or interest created.

7. A bequest of property to testator's sisters to be used and controlled by them during their joint lives and that of the survivor, and then over, gives a life estate only to them. Clark v. Mack, 28: 479, 126 N. W. 632, — Mich. —.

8. A defeasible fee which becomes absolute on the death of the widow without remarriage is created by a will which, after reciting that testator is fully convinced that his wife will educate the children and administer "our joint property" as well as if testator was living, directs that she shall take possession and enjoy and administer the property for the time that she remains a widow, with a direction that she assist the children to procure the means best adapted for their future welfare; and it is immaterial that she is forbidden to sell the realty without the consent of the executors or that, in the event of her remarriage, the property is to go to the children. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Bobloski, 28: 1093, 76 Atl. 720, 228 Pa. 52.

9. Where one who has willed property to her sister for life with remainder to her nearest of kin permits the will to stand for two years after the death of the sister, until her own death, without alteration, the property will pass to the nearest of kin. Clark v. Mack, 28: 479, 126 N. W. 632, — Mich. —.

Election.

Retaining suit to compel beneficiary to elect, see Equity, 5.

Right to compel election by devisee in suit to which he is not a party, see Parties, 5.

10. The intent to devise property of a beneficiary in a will must appear upon its face to compel him to elect between asserting his title to such property and claiming the benefit of the provision in the will. McDonald v. Shaw, 28: 657, 121 S. W. 935, 92 Ark. 15. (Annotated)

Charge upon donee or land devised.

11. Where a devisee is subject to a charge or burden, doubts as to the quantum 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

of the estate should be resolved in his favor. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Bobloski, 28: 1093, 76 Atl. 720, 228 Pa. 52.

WITNESSES.

Right of jury to reject testimony of, see Evidence, 49.

Credibility of, as question for jury, see Trial, 14.

Competency.

Effect of interest to disqualify witness in will contest, see Wills, 3.

1. The maker of a promissory note which has been assigned is a competent witness in an action by the assignee against the administrator of the assignor, to prove both the assignment and payment by him to the assignor in his lifetime, as the agent of the assignee. Savre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288. (Annotated)

Examination.

2. A question propounded plaintiff in an action for an accounting for notes delivered to defendant's intestate for collection, as to whether certain items in an account previously rendered defendant, and offered in evidence by him, represented or was intended to represent the notes as to which an accounting was demanded, was properly rejected as leading. Savre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

Cross-examination.

Error as to cross-examination of witnesses, see Appeal and Error, 26, 27.

3. Alleged admission to the opposite party of the same facts testified to by a witness whose deposition has been suppressed cannot be shown in evidence, on the cross-examination of such opposite party, to supply the loss of the deposition suppressed. Savre v. Woodyard, 28: 388, 66 S. E. 320, 66 W. Va. 288.

Discred'iting.

4. That a witness removed from a community ten years previous to a trial does not render inadmissible impeaching testimony of those who knew him when there as to his general reputation for truth and veracity, on the theory that it relates to a period too remote. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

5. A statement of a stranger reported to the beneficiary of a benefit certificate the holder of which has been absent without explanation for seven years, that he had seen the absentee, the receipt of which is admitted by the beneficiary at the trial of the action to enforce the certificate, is merely hearsay, and evidence is properly admissible to impeach the credibility of the one who made it. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

6. Evidence of a witness given at a trial which involved the same facts, and of statements out of court tending to discredit his testimony, is admissible to impeach him. Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen of America, 28: 181, 90 N. E. 1084, 243 Ill. 560.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Effect of appearance by nonresident defendant where process was not served upon him within limitation period, see Appearance, 2.

When action in which process is served by publication is commenced, see Limitation of Actions, 7.

1. No valid judgment can be entered in a proceeding to enforce unpaid taxes against one whose Christian name is Michael, upon a constructive service of process against him by the name of Mike, where there is nothing to show that he ever answered to or tolerated such name. Ohlman v. Clarkson Sawmill Co. 28: 432, 120 S. W. 1155, 222 Mo. 62. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.)

2. Jurisdiction of a nonresident defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage not signed by him is not acquired by publication of a summons in which only the initials of his Christian names are stated, where the verification does not state that his true name could not be discovered, and neither the summons nor notice contained the words "real name unknown," as required by statute, although it is shown that he had transacted business and acted as deputy county clerk and notary public by the name by which he was sued, since a legal name includes the first Christian name in full, and the surname. Butler v. Smith, 28: 436, 120 N. W. 1106, 84 Neb. 78. (Annotated)

X-RAY.

Admissibility of sciagraph in evidence, see Evidence, 29.

Ex J. H.
1/6/11

